ASHES SPREAD AIR-MAIL ROUTE

Graham, who had flown with him over mountains and through storms. Other pilot friends of Graham were his pallbearers and a large section of the little church was reserved for aviators. Scores of floral tributes were banked over the casket of the dead aviator.

The funeral services and consignment to the winds of the ashes of Graham brought an end to the dramatic chapter of his plane crash and death in the Utah wilds, ending a career of 187,000 miles of uninterrupted flight.

The scattering of the ashes over the air-mail trail from this city to Salt Lake City was done in accordance with the wish of the widow.

BERMAN'S HEARING DRAGS ON

Only One Witness Heard for State With Six More to be Called Next Week

With six witnesses remaining to be called next week the prosecution of Jacob Berman, business associate of S. C. Lewis, president of the Julian Petroleum Corporation, dragged through a dull and warm day in Superior Judge Schauer's court yesterday.

Fred Packard, a stock transfer clerk of the Julian Corporation, was the only witness to testify and the rest of the day went to the reading of a deposition given by Berman months ago in a civil action. The deposition, according to the prosecution, discloses how Berman operated the stock department of the company.

According to prosecution counsel their side of the case should be in the records by the middle of next week and the defense probably will require at least another week. Judge Schauer is hearing the case without a jury.

Berman, who was returned to this city from the Federal prison at McNeil Island, where he is serving a sentence for having used the mails to defraud, has been a witness in a number of felony cases all growing out of the Julian crash in 1927. Now he is on trial charged with forgery and embezzlement also growing out of the operations of the Julian corporation.

Janitor Beats Drinking Fine by Killing Self

Luke Cavanaugh, 47 years of age, was to have appeared in Night Court last night.

"I'll be back with the $10 to pay my fine, and I promise to quit drinking," he had told Municipal Judge Miller on Thursday night following conviction on the charge of intoxication.

Judge Miller knew the man well. He'd been in court on the same charge before—a futile little man, who worked as a janitor at 821 South Normandie avenue.

But Cavanaugh didn't appear in court. In a laborious hand he'd written the explanation and the note was found beside his body in the small apartment at the Normandie address where he lived:

"I give up. I turned on the gas, but it wasn't fast enough. So I took some poison."

The owner of the apartment-house found the body and notified Judge Miller.

INJURED GIRL ASKS $102,800 DAMAGES

Helen H Rengstorff

For one scar on her cheek $102,800 is asked by Helen H. Rengstorff in a suit against the Yellow Cab Company and Paul Pruitt, taxicab chauffeur. Miss Rengstorff is a cousin of County Counsel Matson and is an office worker. She asserts her chances of marriage will be impaired greatly by the fact that one cheek was scarred in an automobile accident at Wilshire Boulevard and New Hampshire avenue last year.

She asserts that the car in which she was riding collided with a taxicab driven by Pruitt. Attorney Theodore C. McKenna represents her. The taxicab company and Pruitt contend that Miss Rengstorff and the driver of her car were to blame for the accident.

PACT NEARS APPROVAL

Ratification Set for This Week

Irreconcilables and Other Foes of Naval Treaty End Fight as Voices Give Out

Final Vote of Agreement Receives Attention With Real Vote Due in Next Few Days

WASHINGTON, July 19. (AP)—Opponents of the London naval limitation agreement early next week seemed assured tonight as the opposition ended its speech-making and permitted the text of the treaty to be formally approved.

To end at the stubborn fight put up by the militant band under Senator Johnson, Republican, California, was heralded as the only chance of amendments offered to the pact were shouted down without a record vote.

Action started today's session with the assumption of the continuous session carried on by the treaty foes for the last three days, but his colleagues heard and after a short debate yielded for the consideration of the text of the treaty. Then by one the twenty-six articles of the pact were read and late in the day they were completed.

OPPONENTS TIRED

Chairman Borah of the Foreign Relations Committee, who is in charge of the treaty, then offered the resolution of ratification. He and Senator Johnson that he had no intention of seeking to talk the rules and will take it up with Senator Swanson Monday. The plan to resolve the resolution to lie over a day.

Indications that the opponents are ending an filibuster against the treaty and will let it come to a vote in regular order next week, when leaders earlier in the day planned to forego the night session to finish then moved adjournment until Monday.

The days of continuous debate forced on by the group of opponents obviously had tired them. Senators gave notice today to their aides they could go on no longer at the end of the fight against the pact obviously was at hand.

TIRING FIGHT

In opposition or understanding of the pact made when Johnson ended his speech, but it was conceded by opponents that they are making a losing fight.

An overwhelming majority will support the resolution of ratification when it comes to a vote next week.

NUDE BATHING WILL BE NEXT

But It Will Be Done in Sun Behind High Board Beach Fences

CHICAGO, July 19. (AP)—Lake Michigan bathers, if Health Commissioner Arnold M. Kegel has his way, may soon be able to absorb the sun's rays without the hindrance of a bathing suit.

Dr. Kegel yesterday asked for the establishment of solariums at all beaches, one for each sex.

"A solarium," the commissioner said, "is nothing but a stretch of sand with a high board fence around it."

Says Negroes and Farmers Were to be Used to Further Scheme

NEW YORK, July 19. (AP)—Charges of Gregory Bessedovsky, former soviet charge d'affaires at Paris and Tokio, that the Moscow government planned to spend vast sums to foment revolution in the United States, were placed before the special House Communist investigating committee today by Police Inspector John A. Lyons of the radical bureau.

The charges were contained in an article by Bessedovsky printed in a Jewish newspaper last March. The former diplomat, who was refused entry into the country, accused the Amtorg Trading Company of carrying on propaganda work besides being a commercial agency of the soviet nation.

High officials of the Amtorg company, the article said, were sent here in the guise of commercial agents, and were instructed to permit soviet agents to draw funds for propaganda.

CRIME LAID TO GLANDS

Stanford Medico Tells His Findings in Study at San Quentin

Malformation of Body Held Main Cause of Human Misbehavior

WASHINGTON, July 19. (AP)—A new way of reasoning the why of crime was laid before President Hoover's law-enforcement commission today by a young San Francisco physician who believes the day will come when it will be generally accepted that the chief factor in all human misbehavior lies in chemical or physical malformation of men's bodies.

Dr. Ralph A. Reynolds, the physician, gave his findings from extensive investigation in San Quentin prison, California, to Chairman Wickersham and Commissioner Anderson, in charge of the inquiry into causes of crime. The result was arrangement with Reynolds to extend his research into several other States and to embody his conclusions in the commission's final report.

BASIS OF INQUIRY

Starting upon the medical fact that definite disturbances of human glands often are accompanied by abnormal behavior, Reynolds began an independent investigation among the prison population last summer to determine whether the obverse were true: That crime or antisocial or abnormal actions go along with poorly functioning glands.

Although the results are yet far from conclusive enough to back up a dogmatic theory, he said today, they have convinced him exhaustion of the field is warranted.

"This is not a theory," he explained, "it is an interpretation, a line of reasoning more scientific, I believe, than the prevalent practice of merely punishing, or merely pitying criminals.

CHILD'S CASE CITED

"Here is a girl 11 years of age," he exemplified, "who, because of a disfunctioning gland, has developed all the physical and instinctive characteristics normally attained in 18 years. She has the problems of 18 years, and the experience and knowledge of but 11 years. Is it any wonder she gets into trouble? Yet, if we did not know her physical defect, we would only condemn or pity her for moral turpitude."

With the co-operation of Dr. L. L.

TYPHOON'S DEATH TOLL SIXTY-FIVE

Hundreds Injured and Scores Missing After Pacific Storm

TOKIO, July 20 (Sunday) (AP)—An official compilation of the Kiushiu Island typhoon toll based on partially complete returns today placed the dead at sixty-five.

Twenty persons are missing on this island, at the foot of the Japanese chain, alone. Two hundred and fifty-four were seriously injured.

The typhoon, sweeping in from the Pacific Ocean, destroyed 10,686 houses, including dwellings, shops, schools and public buildings, and severely damaged 31,311 structures.

Seven hundred and fifty-six vessels, mostly small fishing craft, were sunk and 126 are missing.

Other districts over which the typhoon passed have not reported their losses.

Queer Malady Grips Student

BERKELEY, July 19. (AP)—Unconscious since Friday, with his jaws locked, Harry A. Fernald, 23 years of age, was in the University of California infirmary tonight suffering from a mysterious malady physicians have been unable to diagnose.

His roommate, Edwin Sweeting, said Fernald has been "acting queerly" for several days and yesterday lapsed into a coma. Dr. Robert T. Legge, superintendent of the infirmary, said the youth may be suffering from a combination of lockjaw and sleeping sickness, although there is no wound that might cause lockjaw.

Fernald is a senior student at the university, registered from Madera.

Mexico Protests Air Trespassing

MEXICO CITY, July 19. (AP)—The Mexican authorities today were reported to have protested against United States army airplanes flying over Mexican territory near Eagle Pass, Tex.

The Interior Department announced receipt of a message from the Immigration Commissioner at Piedras Negras that airplanes carrying the United States Army lettering on their fuselage frequently fly over Mexico before landing.

AUTOMOBILE WRECKS TRAIN

Fifty-Eight Injured, Six Seriously, When Locomotive and Two Coaches Leave Rails and Overturn

ELIZABETH (N. J.) July 19. (AP)—Fifty-eight persons were injured, at least six critically, when a Pennsylvania Railroad express train, bound from Philadelphia to New York, struck an abandoned automobile tonight and was derailed, causing the engine and two coaches to plunge down an embankment and overturn.

The accident occurred at De Hart Place in South Elizabeth, the train was traveling at a high rate of speed as no stop is scheduled at either South Elizabeth or Elizabeth.

Two hours after wreck police arrested as material witnesses James William Allcroft, his brother, A. N. Allcroft, and William Mcnari, occupants of the abandoned machine. The three men said a fourth man had been driving the car and police immediately started a search for him. The police said the automobile had been driven across a station guard fence on a forbidden crossing and that the men had jumped when they saw the express approaching.

THRONG AT WRECK

As soon as Engineer E. L. Gaffney saw the machine he applied the brakes, but the nine-car train traveling at approximately sixty miles an hour, could not be stopped in time. Crashing into the automobile, the engine jumped the rails, collided against a signal tower and then plunged over the embankment to the sidewalk below.

The engine shot over the left side of the embankment and two coaches over the right, with a fourth coach hanging over the side of the viaduct.

Passengers in the derailed coaches were hurled about, many of them suffering fractures of the arms and legs. The crash of the wrecked express attracted thousands of persons to the scene, a number playing golf on a miniature course nearby arriving within a few minutes.

PASSENGERS CALM

Police and firemen were called and aided by volunteers, the injured were removed from the wrecked cars. Ambulances from three hospitals reached the scene within a few minutes and were occupied for more than an hour in removing the injured to the Elizabeth General Hospital and St. Elizabeth's Hospital. Among the hurt were the engineer and fireman and three other members of the train crew.

Witnesses said the injured for the most part took their plight calmly and because of the rapidity with which the rescue work was effected there was virtually no panic. With the exception of the six reported critically injured, most of the others were suffering from cuts, shocks and broken bones.

New Mexican Storms Delay Plane Traffic

ZUNI, (N. M.) July 19. (AP)—Severe storms over western New Mexico and northern Arizona today disrupted traffic and forced passenger planes on established air routes to set down for the night.

The Western Air Express plane enroute from Albuquerque, N. M., to Los Angeles, Cal., struck a storm here late this afternoon and turned back. It was reported safely in Albuquerque for the night. Zuni is fifty miles west of Albuquerque.

Another Western Air Express plane was reported held up in Holbrook, Ariz., because of a storm.

The storms, while severe and accompanied by heavy rains, are said to be seasonable and probably will be followed by clear skies tomorrow.

Blast Victims Violated Rule

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19. (AP)—City Engineer O'Shaughnessy revealed today matches and cigarettes were found in the clothing of two of the twelve victims of the explosion of the Hetch Hetchy tunnel Thursday.

"Federal and State regulations, he said, prohibited workers in tunnels where gas was likely to collect from carrying matches.

"Discovery of the matches and cigarettes gives rise to the surmise they may have had part in the explosion," O'Shaughnessy said.

Girl Loses Life in Boat Crash

CHICAGO, July 19. (AP)—Betty Ayres, 18 years of age, was killed today when the speed boat Whoopee, which she was riding with a pleasure party, crashed into the racing yawl Searah, owned by George Pulver of Washington, D. C., catapulting her against the sailboat from the prow of the speedster.

Both boats were sunk, but other occupants escaped with minor hurts.

BABIES MIXED IN HOSPITAL

Blood Tests Fail to Solve Identity Mystery and Anthropologists Will be Consulted

CHICAGO, July 19. (Exclusive)—Mr. and Mrs. William Watkins stared moodily at the floor as Mr. Watkins fondled a 3-week-old baby boy whom they had until recently assumed to be their own first born.

Opposite them in a room in the Inglewood Hospital where a consultation was in progress today sat Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bamberger. They sadly regarded the cheerful countenance of another 3-week-old boy whom they had assumed, pridefully, was destined to bear forever the name of Bamberger.

In various attitudes of concentration, numerous physicians, hospital officials and health department experts stood about giving their opinions as to whether the baby who was supposed to be the image of Mr. Watkins wasn't in reality the Bamberger offspring, and the pride of the Bamberger home, really a little Watkins.

HOT WAVE SWEEPS NATION; BRINGS DEATH AND RUIN

Thirty Succumb, Crops Burn and Drought Threatens Areas From Midwest to Atlantic Coast

BY JOHN P. GALLAGHER
"Times" Staff Correspondent

CHICAGO July 19. (Exclusive)—From the scorching plains of Kansas and Nebraska to the Atlantic Seaboard smothering southwest winds are claiming life, withering grain crops, slowing up business generally, and threatening drought over widespread sections. It is the second record-breaking heat wave of July and, according to the government bureaus of the Middle West, no relief is in sight until the middle of next week.

Upwards of thirty-five deaths were reported during the day, although the intense heat covered a wide area with three-figure readings common. Live stock in many places in the Middle West saw green pastures turn russet and die, while corn was being "fired in the field" all through the Central States.

WATER SHORTAGE

Pumping stations throughout the East have been seriously taxed by the heat wave. In Maryland warnings were issued that unless there was rain soon there would have to be a 50 per cent curtailment of water consumption.

The worst dry spell on record was found in Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, Maryland and Virginia.

J. B. Kincer, chief of the division of agricultural meteorology of the Weather Bureau at Washington, estimates that in Ohio alone the rainfall shortage on the basis of normal precipitation amounts to 140,000,000 tons of water daily for thirty-seven days.

Heat from the southwest was carried northeastward today on the wings of brisk, but scorching winds. The heat which Friday topped 100 in Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Illinois, today soared to new all-time records.

CHICAGO SWELTERS

Chicago, which escaped last week's heat wave, sweltered today under 103 deg. registered at the Weather Bureau station located three blocks from the lake, while the interior and surrounding western suburbs experienced 110 deg. New York City suffered from the hottest day of the year and a new record for all time on the 19th inst., when the thermometers registered 96 deg.

While Phillipsburg, Kan., was perhaps the hottest place in the country, with a reading of 113 degrees, the Missouri Valley generally suffered most. Fairbury, Neb., with 112, officially led Nebraska. This, incidentally, is the highest temperature ever recorded in that State. Red Cloud, with 110 degrees; Ashland and Grand Island, with 109 degrees each, and Omaha with 107 were some of the hot spots.

DEATHS IN OMAHA

Street thermometers in Omaha ran up to 110. Four deaths from the heat were recorded in Omaha. The heat has become so intense that hundreds of farmers are being driven out of their wheat fields. Corn is being damaged in many sections.

Today Bishop Rummell of the Catholic archdiocese of Omaha ordered prayers for rain tomorrow in all the churches in the diocese, the prayers to continue until relief comes. The present heat wave is the most serious in the history of the Missouri River Valley section. There has been no rain for more than three weeks.

Indiana faces the worst drought since 1901. Only five or six inches of rain has fallen so far this summer and crops are beginning to curl. Temperatures there today ranged from 94 to 103 degrees.

SERIOUS CROP DAMAGE

Serious crop damage is reported in Illinois, where a long drought and the intense heat of this and last week caused corn to shrivel in the fields. Pastures, lawns and even shrubbery has been withered. In the vicinity of Canton, where the temperature today was 102, a prolonged drought has almost ruined the corn stand.

Crops throughout the States of Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma, where the thermometers maintained temperatures of more than 100, were burning severely under the relentless rays of a broiling sun. Salina, Kan., reported 104 deg.; Concordia, 103; St. Louis, 103, and Kansas City, 101. Many other cities throughout these States reported readings of 100 or slightly over.

IOWA SITUATION

Iowa today went through the second day of its second July heat wave with the temperatures on both days reaching the 103-deg. mark in Des Moines. No deaths directly traceable to the heat were reported. Horses and fat hogs, which succumbed by the hundreds during the heat of a week ago, again are beginning to suffer. Pastures which were nearly killed by the last terrific heat are almost entirely dried up. Only light rains in portions of the State have allayed the drought. The corn crops are beginning to fire under the blistering rays of the sun, and already an appreciable

G.O.P. GAINS STRENGTH

Primaries Show Tariff Popular

Party Leaders Confident of Retaining Control in Both Houses

Fewer Losses Than Usual in Midterm Election Now Anticipated

BY LAURENCE M. BENEDICT
"Times" Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, July 19. (Exclusive)—Now that the 1930 campaign for control of Congress is well under way, Republican leaders have rechecked their earlier estimates of the situation and are more than ever convinced that they will continue to control both houses.

They readily concede some losses. It would be too much to expect to hold all the seats gained in the 1928 landslide. But they believe on the basis of their most recent surveys that the losses will not be as heavy as the normal average of losses by the party in power in the mid-term election.

To date the primaries and the nominating conventions have failed to furnish any evidence to bear out the widely predicted popular revolt against the tariff which the Democrats are trying so hard to convert into a campaign issue. On the contrary, they have furnished some very substantial evidence of a strong popular sentiment in support of the tariff.

DEMOCRATIC CLAIMS

To control Congress the Democrats must gain ten seats in the Senate and fifty-two in the House. The Democratic National Committee, through its publicity bureau, unhesitatingly claims both. It goes even further and predicts an overturn of seventy-three seats in the House, giving the Democrats a substantial working majority in that body.

Republican campaign directors, examining the reports of their scouts with a view to getting at the exact truth of the situation, are unwilling to concede a loss of even five Senate seats and they are confident that losses in the House will be held below thirty, leaving a margin of twenty-two.

Several seasoned strategists, with the war map before them, have worked out the following table of possible losses by States: Illinois, 1; Indiana, 2; Kentucky, 3; Maryland, 1; Massachusetts, 4; Missouri, 4; New Jersey, 1; North Carolina, 2; Ohio, 3; Oklahoma, 1; Nebraska, 1; Pennsylvania, 2, and, Virginia, 3. Total, 28.

TABLE DISPUTED

This, in the opinion of other Republican observers, is being rather too generous with the Democrats. It is giving them many "breaks" which might easily go the other way. On the other hand, it does not allow for the possibility of the loss of several seats scattered in such States as New York, Connecticut and West Virginia. In any event, it is difficult to get the figure above the thirty mark.

Analysis of the primary figures to date furnishes considerable encouragement to the Republican high command. Thirteen States have held primaries or nominating conventions to date. These States have 132 seats in Congress, of which 111 are held by Republicans.

In view of the reputed political unrest in the country it is rather surprising to find 101 incumbents have been renominated to fill the 111 seats; that four of the incumbents—Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick of Illinois, Representative White of Maine, Representative Dickinson of Iowa and Representative Pritchard of North Carolina, have been nominated for the Senate, and that a majority of the re-

HEAT IGNORED BY HOOVER

President Sticks to Desk Until Late in Day and Then Goes on Auto Ride With Family

WASHINGTON, July 19. (AP)—Through one of the hottest days of the summer in the capital, President Hoover stuck to his desk today except for a brief ride late in the afternoon accompanied by Mrs. Hoover and their younger son Allan.

The Chief Executive had hoped to make his usual week-end trip to his lodge in the Virginia Mountains, but since the special session of the Senate started he has made it a practice of staying in his office while the Senate was meeting.

Allan Hoover arrived home yesterday to spend the week-end with his parents and expects to depart late tomorrow for Bayonne, N. J., where he is working during the summer.

The Hoovers, with two secret service men in a car behind, motored for nearly four hours, returning to the White House shortly before 8 o'clock tonight. They drove through Maryland to White's Ferry, then across into Virginia, to Leesburg and Fairfax before returning home.

NAVAL TREATY APPROVAL NEAR

Senate Scheduled to Act on it This Week

Foes Abandon Their Fight on Pact in Despair

Text of Agreement Granted Formal Sanction

However, more than a dozen reservations are pending to be acted upon and the foes still may debate these, prolonging the contest.

Sixty-two Senators answered the opening roll call today which leaders believe assures a quorum until the end.

During the reading of the treaty articles, Senators Hale, Republican, Maine, and Copeland, Democrat, New York, constantly peppered Senator Reed, Republican, Pennsylvania, one of the delegates to London, with questions, thus drawing the proponents into the debate which they had determined to leave entirely to the foes.

Hale and Copeland read their questions from typewritten papers and Reed called attention to this at one stage as he showed irritation at the constant examination.

Senator Bingham, Republican, Connecticut, offered the first amendment. It proposed that the United States would have the right to build eight-inch-gun cruisers if Great Britain or Japan built six-inch-gun cruisers under the escalator clause.

Senator Borah and Reed argued that the amendment was unnecessary. They insisted that under the escalator clause the United States has the right to build whatever class of ships is needed to protect herself if at any time the nation is endangered by naval construction of other countries.

Senator Moses, Republican, New Hampshire, submitted the only other amendment to the treaty text. He proposed that rules of international law applying to submarines in regard to merchant ships should apply only to unarmed merchant ships. But this, too, went out without a record vote.

Despite the optimistic hopes of members of both sides, a new batch of reservations was dumped into the basket today. Johnson offered two, Senator Moses, one, and Hale, one.

Johnson was left almost alone today by his small band of treaty foes to carry on the debate. Notice was given by several of those who previously had spoken at considerable length they would not indulge in any filibuster and they had nothing more to say. Johnson insisted there was no filibuster, although the proponents have made this charge in face of the extended speeches delivered during the last three days.

Senator Walsh, Democrat, Massachusetts, also offered a resolution today, explaining as he did so that he did not want to lend any encouragement to the opposition. His resolution would declare the Senate in favor of completing by December 31, 1936, the eighteen eight-inch-gun cruisers allowed the American Navy under the treaty. The pact expires at that time.

Reed, who has expressed himself in favor of building up to the limits of the treaty provisions, indicated he will favor the resolution. Senator Robinson, Democrat, Arkansas, another of the delegates to London, likewise expressed himself in favor of building the Navy up to parity.

One of Johnson's reservations would declare the treaty null and void should the United States at any time within the life of the pact join the League of Nations or the World Court.

While friends of the pact have agreed to accept the reservation of Senator Norris, Republican, Nebraska, providing that no consent is given in ratification of the treaty to any secret agreements or understandings which may exist, they have drawn the line against all other reservations. Little hope for adoption of any of the reservations is held out.

"ALIEN" SENT TO OWN LAND

Technical Englishman, Really American, Deported to "Foreign" Country by United States

NEW YORK, July 19. (Exclusive)—An English boy, 18 years of age, James Davison Burns, was deported today from Ellis Island to a foreign land—his native England. He will land in a country where he has not a single relative, not a single friend, not an acquaintance, and where the cut of his clothes, his accent, his slang and his mannerism will mark him as an American.

Burns happened to be born in Newcastle, but since he was 11 he has wanted to be an American and he has spent only two days in England. Those were the two days he had to pass in London the first time he was deported, before he could find a ship that would take him back to the United States.

His father and mother left Newcastle for Canada when he was 3, Burns said today. At 11 he was old enough to make his own way and he ran away from home and entered the United States illegally. He wandered about the country and, all his life having been fond of horses, he ended up as a jockey on the race track at Tia Juana. Then he rode at various tracks along the Pacific Coast and was making his way successfully until 1927, when an enemy tipped off the immigration officers that he had no right to be in the country.

Burns spent all the time from January 7 to the 1st inst. in jail, and then he was sent to Ellis Island to await deportation, which took place today.

Exoneration Won by Hugo Stinnes

BERLIN, July 19. (AP)—Hugo Stinnes, Jr., who was acquitted in July, last, of attempting to defraud the government in connection with the disposition of war bonds, today again was declared not guilty in the Criminal Court of Appeals. His codefendant, Erich Nothmann, of Hamburg, also was acquitted.

Stinnes, son of the German postwar industrial magnate, is completely exonerated by the verdict. Stinnes was charged with attempting to defraud the government of $480,000.

REVOLT CHARGE BEFORE HOUSE

sent to New York usually under a disguise," Bessedovsky wrote, adding that he was appointed to the directorate of the concern and instructed to act as an unofficial ambassador. He was refused admittance by the Federal government because of his political connections with the soviet.

The Russian, who fled from Paris and was charged by Moscow with having taken some funds illegally, said the soviets had an unofficial representative in Washington named Skwirsky.

SUBSIDY INCREASE

The soviets planned, the article continued, to lay the groundwork for a revolution among the "12,000,000 discontented Negroes and farmers of the United States."

Subsidies to the American Communist party had been increased to $100,000 annually, Bessedovsky wrote, adding that emergency funds up to $10,000 each were permitted to be drawn through the Amtorg, which later would be reimbursed.

The former diplomat also charged that the Russian secret police were active in this country, two German Reds whose names he gave as Wagner and Neiman being sent here to organize the Communists. Germans were sent, he explained, in order that Washington could not charge Moscow with having planted them.

STRIKES PROVOKED

After reading the article, John J. Leary of New York, industrial editor of the World, testified that strikes initiated by Communists were used as training grounds for a revolution and for collection of funds for propaganda. He said the Communists were causing serious trouble in some of the mining districts.

Asa P. Randolph of New York, president of the Brothedhood of Sleeping Car Porters, said the Communists attempted to control or destroy his organization during a strike several years ago, but had been ousted. They had been active throughout the country, he said.

The Communists promised the Negroes to eliminate all racial discrimination, he said, but it was doubtful if the number of Negro Communists was being rapidly increased, although he felt there was a growing symphany in his race for Communism.

SCIENCE BALKED BY BABY MIX-UP

of June 30 in the Inglewood Hospital Mrs. Watkins's son was presented to the world. At 6:23 o'clock Mrs. Bamberger's son, her third child, was born on the same floor.

The two mothers, who occupied the same room, left the hospital the 2nd inst. All went well until on the 12th inst. Mr. Watkins, watching his baby as he had a bath, noticed a piece of adhesive on the infant's back. On it in red ink was the name "Bamberger."

MYSTERY DEEPENS

He got in touch with Mr. Bamberger, who, astounded, found a piece of adhesive marked "Watkins" which had been removed from his baby and thrown in a waste basket.

The mystery proved to be a deep one. Dr. Arnold H. Kegel, health commissioner of Chicago, in starting an investigation, was confronted with such a maze of intricate and confusing facts that he announced it will be the middle of next week before a jury of experts possibly can agree on the real identity of the babies. Meanwhile he is pondering on who he will appoint to solve the fates of the infants Bamberger and Watkins.

"Our chief hope is in anthropology," he said. "One of the babies is Semitic, the other Nordic, and experts analyzing the different racial characteristics of the head, hair and features, should be able to throw some light on the secret.

THEY LOOK ALIKE

"However," he admitted, "they look as alike as two peas in a pod."

He also stated that he will study the problem "as if it were my own child." At which some one remarked that that was the trouble, there were two children, not one.

Among the difficulties was that of the blood test. In the morning Dr. Kegel cheerfully remarked he could solve the problem by blood tests, determining whose children were whose by the rule that if a parent has blood of type one, two or three, the child has blood of that type. But all parents were of type number four except Mr. Bamberger. And if a parent has blood of type four, which is rare, its offspring may be of any of four types.

LARGE TUNA CAUGHT

Thirty Deaths Reported as Mercury Goes Skyward

Crops Burn and Drought Threatens Wide Areas

Extreme South Enjoys Lowest Temperatures

cut in the total corn crop has been made by this heat wave, it is reported. The damage is general throughout the State.

THREE SUCCUMB

Three men who yesterday were prostrated by the record-breaking heat of Northern Michigan, died today. They were Fred Leonard, Jerome Walls and Michael Trojan, all of Detroit. Relief came to that section today when the thermometers fell from 96 deg. Friday to 84 deg. today.

Most of the deaths and prostrations during the day occurred in the East, where exceptionally high humidity, together with high temperatures, made the atmosphere along the Atlantic Seaboard extremely oppressive. New England, hardest hit in that area, reported sizzling temperatures and a dozen deaths. Auburn and Albany, N. Y., each reported one death, Pittsburgh one, while towns in West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania recorded a total of ten deaths, according to reports.

Altoona, Pa., recorded a new high mark with 103 deg.; Baltimore's 99 deg. was a record.

Two deaths and two prostrations were reported in Chicago which was the hottest large city in the country today. The 103-deg. mark, which equaled the all-time heat record, drove thousands to the beaches during the day. By dark, however, the heat began to recede somewhat and those of the populace who planned to sleep in the parks tonight went back to their homes.

FLORIDA ONE OF FEW COMFORTABLE STATES

ATLANTA, July 19. (AP)—The farther south the lower the mercury today.

Virginia and Kentucky were about as hot as Chicago and Nebraska. Charlottesville, Va., reporting a high of 103 and Ashland, Ky., 101. Elsewhere in the two States readings ranged from 90 up. In the Shenandoah Valley in Virginia apple growers reported 105.

Down in Florida, however, it scarcely approached 90. St. Petersburg had 90 for a brief time, but it ranged downward from that to 69. Jacksonville had a maximum of 87 with showers to relieve that. Miami also had a high of 87, broken by breezes and thunder showers.

North Carolina's highest was at Raleigh, where 90 was reported, with Charlotte 6 degrees lower and a low humidity everywhere.

Tennessee ranged from 96 in Memphis to 93 in Nashville. Drought, not heat, is the most serious aspect of the weather in the Memphis area. Today is the sixty-second day of dry weather, which surpasses the 1926 record by one day.

G.O.P. LEADERS GET NEW HOPE

mainder did not stand for re-election. This record is believed to be almost without parallel.

TEST IN IOWA

As for the tariff, the public reaction has exceeded the most optimistic hopes of the protectionist faction. The first came in Iowa, where Representative Dickinson campaigned for the Senatorial nomination against Gov. Hammill. Dickinson voted for the Hawley-Smoot bill in the House and ran on that platform. Gov. Hammill condemned the tariff. It was virtually the only issue in the campaign. Dickinson won easily. All the Iowa Congressmen supported the tariff and all of them who are seeking re-election were renominated. Several days ago the Iowa Republicans held their State convention and adopted a resolution praising the Hawley-Smoot bill as the most favorable tariff ever enacted for agriculture.

North Dakota, with its radical Nonpartisan League complex, likewise contributed an indorsement of the tariff. All three of the North Dakota Representatives supported the tariff, while the two Senators opposed it. The Representatives were opposed in the primary because of their tariff votes, but all of them were renominated by sizable majorities.

In the Seventh Virginia District, represented by Representative Garber, Republican, there were reports of discontent over the tariff. Nevertheless, the Republicans of the district held a convention several days ago, renominated Garber and adopted a ringing indorsement of the tariff, with an accompanying blast against the Democrats for delaying its passage.

"MERCY MURDER" LAID TO MEXICAN YOUTH

GOMEZ PALACIO (Durango, Mex.) July 19. (AP)—Carlos Perez, an asserted "humanitarian killer," was arrested here today and will be tried for the murder of his insane brother Marcos. The accused, according to charges, shot his brother to relieve his sufferings on the order of their father, Jose Perez, wealthy cotton planter.

SEATTLE, July 19. (AP)—It's perfectly all right for Mayor Frank Edwards of Seattle to kiss visiting actresses as he did Jean Harlow today.

That is the attitude taken by Mrs. Edwards, who said it "not only was all right, but particularly appropriate." It would be too much of a temptation for him to resist.

CRIME BLAMED ON GLAND ILLS

Stanley, the prison physician, Reynolds examined and compiled yards of statistics about 200 criminals in San Quentin, all of whom had easily recognizable glandular disfunctions.

MAJOR DISCOVERIES

Some of them were thyroid cases, suffering from wrong secretion from a horseshoe-shaped structure in the throat which often causes great nervousness. Others were pituitary patients, belonging to that group of physically abnormal individuals among whom obesity, when pronounced, often is accompanied by excessive growth in adolescence and a definite easy-going, "good-natured-fat" personality. The rest had disturbances of the reproductive system—a field where many outlines still are dim to scientists—a field in which, it is acknowledged, malfunction means abnormal behavior.

"I found a thread of unity, a relationship, between thyroid trouble and crimes of violence, such as murder and assault," Reynolds said. "I found it between pituitary disturbances and crimes of irresponsibility such as robbery and thieving, and between the other disfunctions and acts of moral turpitude."

PROPOSED SOLUTION

The percentage of abnormal gland conditions is about 40 per cent higher among the prison than among the law-abiding population Reynolds concluded from his study.

Far from denying that environment as well as inherited make-up mold human behavior, he proposed to arrange environment to offset the other. Thus, he believes, the mentors of society can reduce crime.

Reynolds is on the medical staff of Leland Stanford University, and became interested in the sociological aspects of medicine while doing postgraduate student work.

Later at the invitation of the soviet minister of health, he went to Russia to study public health. He was called to Washington after Commissioner Anderson heard of his research in San Quentin.

"BEST" CLIMATE TO BE CHECKED

REDWOOD CITY, July 19. (AP)—For years Redwood City has boasted its climate is "best by government test." Now comes the check-up. An official government weather bureau is to be established, the City Council having appropriated $100 for the purpose.

ROADS OUTLAY TO SET RECORD

Nation Will Spend at Rate of $80 for Each Auto

Total to Exceed Last Year's by $250,000,000

Estimates Made Public by Fact-Finding Body

WASHINGTON, July 19. (AP)—The nation will spend for highway construction this year an estimated average of nearly $80 for every motor car registered.

Pushed ahead to offset business depression, road building was estimated today by one of President Hoover's fact-finding committees to be on its way to a record expenditure of $1,750,000,000. This figure marks an increase of more than $250,000,000 over the 1929 outlay.

It was arrived at in a survey begun last July by the committee on recent economic changes of the President's conference on unemployment in appraising public construction as a factor in business stability.

SEMINARY EXECUTIVE DIES

"How I Licked Wretched Old Age at 63"

"I Quit Getting Up Nights . . Banished Foot and Leg Pains . . Got Rid of Rheumatic Pains and Constipation . . . Improved Embarrassing Health Faults . . . Found New Strength."

"At 61 I thought I was through. I blamed old age, but it never occurred to me to actually fight back. I was only half-living, getting up nights . . . embarrassed in my own home . . . constipated . . . constantly tormented by pains and aches. At 62 my condition became almost intolerable. I had about given up hope when a doctor recommended your treatment. Then at 63, it seemed that I shook off 20 years almost over night.

Forty—The Danger Age

These are the facts, just as I learned them. In 65% of all men, the vital prostate gland slows up soon after 40. No pain is experienced, but as this distressing condition continues, sciatica, backache, severe bladder weakness, constipation etc., often develop.

Prostate Trouble

These are frequently the signs of prostate trouble. Now thousands suffer these handicaps needlessly! For a prominent American scientist, after seven years of research, discovered a new, safe way to stimulate the prostate gland to normal health and activity in many cases. This new hygiene is worthy to be called a notable achievement of the age.

A National Institution for Men Past 40

Its success has been startling, its growth rapid. This new hygiene is rapidly gaining in national prominence. The institution in Steubenville has now reached large proportions. Scores and even hundreds of letters pour in every day, and in many cases, reported results have been little short of amazing. In case after case, men have reported that they have felt ten years younger in six days. Now physicians in every part of the country are using and recommending this treatment.

Quick as is the response to this new hygiene, it is actually a pleasant, natural relaxation, involving no drugs, medicine, or electric rays whatever. The scientist explains this discovery and tells why many men are old at forty in a new book now sent free in 24-page, illustrated form. Every man past forty should know the true meaning of those frank facts. No cost or obligation is incurred. This book is entirely free. You should call if possible, in person for your copy. If impossible to call, mail the coupon immediately, as the edition is limited.

DOOMED SLAYER ENDS OWN LIFE

O'Brien, Oakland Bandit, Dies in San Quentin Cell

Note Explains Desire to Save His Child from Stigma

Trip to Gallows Had Been Set for Next Friday

SAN QUENTIN, July 19. (AP)—William (Red) O'Brien, Oakland bank robber and slayer sentenced to hang next Friday, cheated the gallows today by committing suicide in his cell in condemned row.

Guards found O'Brien's body at breakfast time. Although it was not immediately determined how he ended his life, Warden Holohan believes poison was smuggled into his cell.

O'Brien was the last of three bandits condemned to death for the slaying of William McFarlin, Oakland bank teller, during a robbery.

Louis Lazarus and George Costello died on the gallows after numerous unsuccessful attempts had been made to obtain a commutation of their sentence.

A suicide note, addressed to his wife, Jean, and found in the death cell, was revealed by Warden Holohan. Written in ink, near midnight last night, the note says:

"I have changed my mind about going up there and let them hang me. I intend to kill myself in a little while and save them the trouble of doing it. So I am writing you these few lines before I go.

"I was sincere the other day when I told you that I was going to let them hang me. But I have been thinking it over and I have come to the conclusion that I will go out my own way. Don't feel bad, dear, on account of me not waiting to see you again, as it would only make it harder for both of us.

"I was so glad to see Rene (his sister) and the baby today. But after seeing them I felt pretty blue. I sure hope I make a success of this so nobody will ever be able to tell her when she grows up that her father was hung, or tell you, either.

"Say good-by for me to all your people and to Rene herself, to Sam and Skies and the kids and mine. It is just 12 o'clock so I am going in a few minutes. Good-by, dearest Jean, and Patty. I wish you both all the luck and happiness in the world.

"Your loving husband,

"WILL."

KING CAROL MAKES TRIP WITH HELEN

Rumanians Joyful When They See Pair in Public Apparently Reconciled

BUCHAREST (Rumania) July 19. (AP)—King Carol and Queen Helen of Rumania rode out to Curtea de Arges today to a requiem memorial for King Ferdinand, Carol's father, and there for the time being, at least, put away the marital troubles which had separated them since the Crown Prince chose a path away from the mother of his little son Michael.

Appearing for a journey together for the first time in public since Carol's return, the royal couple were believed by the populace, which had awaited such a gesture, to have composed the last of their differences.

Support was given to that belief when, aboard the private train which took the pair, together with Queen Marie, Prince Nicholas and Princess Ileana and others to the ceremony, King Carol called a Cabinet meeting for the purpose of drafting the legal formula announcing annulment of her divorce.

For many days the people of Rumania had awaited public appearance of Carol and Helen so that they might accept as fact the many rumors which had gained circulation regarding the reconciliation.

Many Indicted in 'Jake' Cases

TOPEKA (Kan.) July 19. (AP)—Two sealed indictments reported by the District Attorney's office to involve a number of eastern distributors in a conspiracy to violate the prohibition act in connection with distribution of adulterated Jamaica ginger, which caused numerous cases of paralysis, were returned today by a Federal grand jury here. The indictments are reported to name approximately forty-five defendants.

Some drug companies are said to be involved.

Italo-American Pilgrimage Hit

ROME, July 19. (AP)—La Tribuna protests editorially against the visit to Italy of an Italian-American Methodist pilgrimage reported to have sailed from New York today.

The newspaper headlines the protest "an undesirable American pilgrimage." The article says, "This does not seem a very opportune time to have this Protestant Italo-American pilgrimage with us, in the eighth year of the Fascist regime which composed differences between the church and state."

Court Upholds Negro Vote Ban

EL PASO, July 19. (AP)—Judge Boyton of the United States District Court today held the State Democratic Executive Committee had a right to bar Negroes from participation in the party primaries.

Judge Boynton held the disqualification of Negroes by the Democrats is not an action of the State, but of private individuals.

EX-ACTRESS NEAR DEATH ON YACHT

Carol Dempster, Spouse and Guests Periled as Explosion Wrecks Boat

WESTPORT (Ct.) July 19. (Exclusive)—Carol Dempster, former protege of D. W. Griffith, who featured her in several of his productions, escaped death tonight when her husband's $35,000 fifty-foot yacht Sawdust Sally was completely wrecked by an explosion and fire.

The former film star now is the wife of Edwin S. Larsen, vice-president of P. W. Chapman & Co. of New York, and the yacht is named after one of the movies in which she appeared. Knute Holstrom, the captain, and Joseph Mallery, a guest, were burned.

Jewelry valued at $75,000 was recovered after the boat was beached and the flames extinguished. Mr. and Mrs. Larsen, Mr. Mallery and another guest, Miss May Hallett of New York, jumped overboard and were picked up by a dingy.

RUM RADIO GROUP HELD UNDER BAIL

Seven Men Seized in Raids on "Outlaw" Stations to Face Court August 1

NEW YORK, July 19. (AP)—Seven men arrested in the seizure of three "outlaw" radio stations on Long Island, believed to have been used by liquor runners, today were held in $7500 bail each for hearing August 1 on charges of violating the Volstead Act and operating unlicensed radios.

Joseph H. Wickert, wealthy retired shoe manufacturer of Mattatuck; Peter Wyckoff, a road house proprietor, also of Mattatuck, and Patrick Fitzgerald, the Bronx, were held on the Volstead charge. Alonzo M. Contdell of East Hampton, Robert Verno and E. J. Blake of Southampton and Sam Schwars of the Bronx are accused of operating the "outlaw" stations.

Twenty-five Treasury agents, Federal radio engineers and deputy sheriffs conducted the raids on four apparently respectable homes last night. They said the unlicensed stations were communicating with Scotland in aiding ships to transport liquor to the United States.

Shooting Laid to Striking Miners

PROVIDENCE (Ky.) July 19. (AP) Three striking miners were arrested today in connection with the shooting of Jesse Edmondson, 21 years of age, last night. Edmondson had made known his intention of going back to work in the mines.

Those under arrest are Ewing Riley, Alva Curry and Nobel Harris.

The disorder was the latest in a series arising from independent strikes in this section which forced the closing of many mines.

LIEUT. ARNOLD ASKS DIVORCE

Round World Flyer Seeks to Lose First Wife

Action Filed in Phoenix as Sequel to Mix-up

Aviator and Priscilla Dean, Wed, Await Decree

PHOENIX, July 19. (AP)—Lieut. Leslie P. Arnold, former United States army pilot, member of the Army's around-the-world flight, filed suit here today for a divorce from Mildred Avery Arnold, whom he married in New York in 1917.

Last year Lieut. Arnold married Priscilla Dean, motion-picture actress. While they were on their honeymoon in the Northwest, they learned the Georgia courts, on petition of Mildred Avery Arnold, had declared null and void Arnold's previous divorce. Arnold and Miss Dean announced they would separate until the marital tangle was straightened out.

Subsequently Mildred Avery Arnold established residence in Long Beach, Cal., with the announced intention of bringing suit for divorce against Arnold, and Arnold established residence in Phoenix.

In his complaint Arnold sets forth he and Mildred Avery Arnold were married in New York, August 13, 1917, that he enlisted for service in the World War while his wife was in a nurses' hospital at Groton, Ct., and that they never lived together. The complaint charges intimacy on the part of Mildred Avery Arnold with "John Doe" in Groton and New London, Ct., in 1919 and 1920, and excessive use of intoxicants. The complaint further cites that Mildred Avery Arnold demanded large sums of money during his army service, and threatened to force his resignation.

Congress Passes That Many in Two Sessions

Total of 19,284 Measures Had Been Offered

WASHINGTON, July 19. (AP)—A total of 927 laws was enacted in the first two sessions of the Seventy-first Congress out of 19,284 measures introduced.

Of these 655 originated in the House and 272 in the Senate. The 655 House bills, however, included five omnibus pension measures containing 3513 House bills and 907 Senate bills, the latter added to the House bills as amendments.

If these had been considered separately, the grand total of laws enacted would be 4341, of which 3167 were originally House bills and 1179 were Senate bills.

SEVEN DISAPPROVED

Only seven measures met with the disapproval of President Hoover, who vetoed four by message and three by failing to sign them after Congress adjourned. One of the bills vetoed by message, proposing increased pensions for Spanish-American War veterans, was enacted over the veto.

A total of 14,047 bills was introduced by House members, and 5237 by Senators. The House passed 470 of the bills and the Senate approved 265 Senate bills, all of which failed of final enactment.

OTHER FIGURES

Senate committees reported favorably on 1163 measures and 1935 bills received the approval of House committees.

The 927 new laws resulting from the special and first regular sessions compare with 993 laws passed in a similar period by the Seventieth Congress, 600 in the Sixty-ninth Congress, 399 in the Sixty-eighth Congress, 153 in the Sixty-seventh Congress and 121 in the Sixty-sixth Congress.

MISSION TO RUSSIA HIT BY STIMSON

Secretary of State Says Tariff Inquiry Should be Made Unofficially

WASHINGTON, July 19. (AP)—Secretary Stimson has advised Secretary Mellon the State Department looks with disfavor upon suggestions that official missions be sent into soviet Russia.

It was recently suggested the Treasury Department would send a representative into Russia to investigate the production of goods by convict labor, forbidden entry into the United States under the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act.

Mr. Stimson said today that while the State Department favors the gathering of necessary information on such subjects, in so far as it concerns the soviet, with which the United States has no diplomatic relations, some other method should be employed.

HAVANA, July 19. (AP)—Cuba's first technical school for women will be ready for opening within eight months. It will train women for industrial employment.

THREE NAMED TO NEW BOARD

President Makes Selections for Power Commission

Various Other Nominations Also Put Before Senate

Batch First Submitted Since Special Session's Start

WASHINGTON, July 19. (AP)—Three members of the newly created Federal Power Commission of five were nominated today by President Hoover in the first batch of nominations he has sent to the Senate since the special session convened.

They are Claude L. Draper, chairman of the Wyoming State Board of Equalization; Ralph B. Williamson, Yakima, Wash., attorney, who has specialized in the study of water power, and Marcel Garsaud, port engineer at New Orleans.

At the same time the Chief Executive nominated William M. Jardine of Kansas, former Secretary of Agriculture, as Minister to Egypt; Brig.-Gen. Frank T. Hines, head of the Veterans' Bureau, as administrator of the combined veterans' administration, and Nicholas Roosevelt of New York as Vice-Governor of the Philippine Islands.

The latter is a second cousin of Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Governor of Porto Rico, and now is an editorial writer on the New York Times.

No comment was forthcoming on the appointments.

The new power commission will supplant the former ex-officio group which was composed of the Secretaries of War, Interior and Agriculture. The President recently announced that Maj.-Gen. Edgar Jadwin would be chairman of this commission, but the latter later notified the President that he will be unable to accept.

Mr. Hoover has withheld all nominations from the Senate since the beginning of the debate on the London treaty to avoid introducing extraneous matter that might divert attention from the treaty.

MEXICO CITY POLICE SEEK MYSTERY MAN

MEXICO CITY, July 19. (Exclusive)—Mexico City police are seeking a mysterious criminal who operates in an unusual manner. The most recent complainant is German Cardoso Gonzales, who was stabbed in his right arm.

The assailant, an unidentified person, accosted him in a lonely street at night, according to Cardoso Gonzalez's story. "What hour is it?" the unknown man, who was well dressed, asked. "Seven minutes of 3," replied Cardoso. "Your hour has come," was the response, and the man plunged a dagger in Cardoso's right arm and fled.

Police say they have received similar complaints in recent months, and believe a crazy man is trying to emulate the famous Don Juan-Manuel of Mexican colonial times.

Don Juan's method of procedure was to accost pedestrians at night, ask them for the hour, and upon receiving an answer to stab the informant, shouting at the same time: "Fortunate are you who knows the hour of your death!"

Vatican Judicial Sphere Pinched

ROME, July 19. (AP)—A plea that the Vatican tribunal should hold jurisdiction over a labor dispute in its territory was rejected by a Roman court today.

The judge held that while the buildings under the Lateran treaties enjoy diplomatic immunity they still continue to form a part of the Italian national territory.

One letter is from a man in Dorset, Eng., who volunteered without expectation of remuneration, and Upton Sinclair, novelist, wrote the Governor from Pasadena, Cal., in behalf of a friend.

The letters continue to come to Gov. Dillon despite the announcement of Dr. Francis I. Proctor, trachoma specialist, he is seeking a blind person.

IRISH SKEPTICS ON UNITY PLAN

Free State Shows Coolness on Briand Project

European Federation Held Not Workable Now

League of Nations' Goal Declared Not Reached

PARIS, July 19. (AP)—The Irish Free State, like Great Britain, gave the European union idea cool treatment in a note received by the Foreign Office today, responding to M. Briand's recent questionnaire.

The reply agrees with the principle of co-operation, but thinks the League of Nations program, which, it says, is far from being achieved, would accomplish the objects of such a federation.

The Irish Free State note suggests that "conditions in Europe and the sentiment of common interests are not yet sufficiently strong to justify the assumption that members of such a union generally would take the collective responsibility in problems which did not concern them individually."

KOSTER PASSED FOR GRAPE POST

Teague Approves Choice of San Franciscan

Appointment Completes Control Board

Report on Tonnage Drive Due Tomorrow

WASHINGTON, July 19. (AP)—Tentative organization of the projected grape-control board was virtually completed today with the approval by the Farm Board of the appointment of Fred J. Koster, president of the California State Chamber of Commerce, as the twenty-first member.

C. C. Teague, member of the Farm Board, sent the following telegram to Koster: "Under terms of the grape-control plan the control board is to submit for approval of the Farm Board the name of one person for director, other directors being equally divided between the fresh and raisin grape growers.

HAPPY SELECTION

"The problems of attempting control under present conditions are most difficult and with the existing factions in the industry, it will require a man of outstanding ability whose logic and fair-mindedness will appeal to all.

"Your selection by the committee, in our opinion, is a most happy one. Offices will be located in San Francisco. If you can accept subject to the sign-up becoming effective, you will be performing a great public service and we urgently request that you do so."

REPORT DUE TOMORROW

Organization was perfected at the suggestion of the Farm Board prior to determination whether the board is to be established in view of the limited time before this year's grape crop is ready. Establishment of the grape-control board, which has as its particular problem the handling of California's grape-crop surplus, is contingent upon obtaining contracts covering 85 per cent of the vineyard acreage.

GROWERS TO END DRIVE AT MASS MEETING

FRESNO, July 19. (Exclusive)—With approximately 25,000 acres of vineyards lacking in the drive to bring 85 per cent of the State's grape production under control in the Federal Farm Board's stabilization program, a last-minute mass meeting will be held at the Fresno Civic Auditorium Tuesday night, at which the closing move in the campaign will be made.

Announcement that the campaign will be brought to a close with the mass meeting was made today by Wylie M. Giffen, chairman of the campaign committee of fifty.

Giffen said that the mass meeting will be devoted exclusively to solicitation of contracts of growers. Similar meetings that have been held throughout the State heretofore have been principally to build up public opinion in favor of the program and to education of growers concerning the importance of the Farm Board's program to the entire Fresno grape and raisin industry. The mass meeting will bring to a close an unofficial extension of the campaign period granted by the Farm Board. The drive officially closed last Monday night, when the contract sign-up was approximately 35,000 acres short of the goal.

POSTMASTERS' WEDDING BEARS AIR-MAIL STAMP

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19. (Exclusive)—A "flying church" of the Western Air Express, circling a sky route over San Leandro Bay today was the setting for a postmaster's wedding—the first of its kind ever held.

The principals were R. E. Chapman, postmaster of Pendleton, Or., and Miss Nana M. Halferty, postmistress of Tujunga. Rev. William Nat Friend, postmaster of Oakland, performed the ceremony 2000 feet above ground as the plane, piloted by Hersh Laughlin and Joseph Smith, circled the East Bay Airdrome.

Six postmasters participated in the affair as principals and guests. With the bridal couple rode Mrs. F. W. James, postmistress at El Segundo, who was matron of honor; F. W. James, her husband, who acted as best man; Capt. C. W. Wright, postmaster at San Pedro; Leslie M. McClary, postmaster at Lomita, and Mrs. Florence A. Alley of El Segundo, and F. J. Fluke, air-mail superintendent of the W.A.E.

The newlyweds left on a honeymoon trip to the home of the bride's parents at Los Angeles.

The postmasters have been attending a convention in Oakland.

Liners to Arm Against Pirates

(Copyright, 1930, by the Chicago Tribune.)

SHANGHAI, July 19. (Exclusive)—All the trans-Pacific liners on the Canadian Pacific Ocean services hereafter will carry heavy military guards against pirates while sailing in Far Eastern waters.

That announcement here today caused considerable speculation due to the fact that pirates heretofore have been confined to smaller British coastwise ships and no attempt has ever been made to capture a trans-Pacific liner carrying world tourists.

HIGHWAY CONTRACTS AWARDED BY STATE

SACRAMENTO, July 19. (AP)—The State Department of Public Works awarded highway contracts today totaling $358,742.56 for projects in Los Angeles, Riverside, Del Norte, Trinity, Yolo and Sacramento counties.

FOSTER GIVES LINGLE CLEWS

Gangster Reported to Have "Talked" Upon Return

Prisoner Whisked Away as Train Reaches Chicago

Questioning Carried Out in Secrecy by Prosecutor

CHICAGO, July 19. (AP)—Official investigators tonight intimated that Frank Foster, reputed to have been the owner of the revolver which killed Jake Lingle, Tribune reporter, had given valuable information to solve the mystery surrounding the newspaper man's death.

But what Foster told the authorities, if anything, was as much a mystery to the general public as was the killing of Lingle itself. Foster was brought back to Chicago on a train which made an unwonted stop in the South Side yards. Twenty detectives swarmed about him, a fleet of squad cars sped away and Foster, said by authorities to be one of the keys in the Lingle killing, had vanished for the day.

"CASE CLEARED UP"

A court stenographer received an emergency call and hastened away, pad in hand. The reporters guessed that Foster was talking.

"Well, the case is all cleared up," an attache of the State Attorney's staff remarked as he emerged from headquarters. And the reporters guessed that Foster had talked. The gangster was brought back from California under indictment for the murder of Lingle, but not accused of being the actual slayer. The prosecutors hoped to learn from him the last owner of the snub-nosed, ancient revolver found beside the Tribune reporter's body. Foster had once owned it, he admitted, but he has said the police took it from him long ago.

SECRECY ENFORCED

Detectives, prosecutors and special investigators threw reporters off their trail. Comment was refused and the place where Foster was taken for questioning could not be learned. An attorney announced that he had been retained for Foster and will demand that he be lodged in the County Jail to await the trial for which his indictment calls. But Foster could not be found.

His wife, returning on the same train from California, had left it at Joliet.

Action was begun to free Tommy Abbottini, alias Abbott, but the court decided the police can keep him in custody until Monday morning. Abbottini was captured by detectives after an automobile chase that ended at his home, his automobile being identified as the one used by the gangsters who fired a fusillade at Jack Zuta, reputed Capone vice and beer manager, and killed a State-street trolley motorman. Mrs. Abbottini was also arrested.

Merit Creates Record Demand for New Sargon

The record-breaking demand for Sargon, now the biggest selling medicine of its kind in the world, is due to one thing only—its unquestioned merit, proven by the statements of thousands who have put it to the test. One of the latest to tell of the splendid results they received from Sargon is Mrs. A. Bauer, 5510 Compton Ave., Los Angeles, who said:

"I used to have the most terrible sick headaches imaginable—there'd be a dull thumping in my head that would last for hours, and even when I'd lie down I'd suffer just the same. I was terribly weak, and so nervous at times that the least noise would startle me. Some friends of mine back East wrote me how wonderfully Sargon had helped them and insisted that I try it. Eight bottles overcame all my troubles, built me up and strengthened me marvelously, and today my health is splendid!

"I took Sargon Pills for constipation that bothered me for years, and they rid me of this trouble entirely, and never did upset me or interfere with my daily routine. The Sargon treatment is truly remarkable."

Sargon may be obtained at all Owl Drug Stores and Liggett Drug Stores in Los Angeles and other cities.—[Advertisement.

GERMANY AND ITALY SEEK NEW BONDS IN EUROPE

Berlin Friendly Toward Moscow and Rome in Effort to Regain Lost Power

BY EUGENE J. YOUNG

NEW YORK, July 19. (Exclusive)—Months ago the prediction was made in these articles that the evacuation of the Rhineland by France would bring an upheaval in the politics of Europe. It was pointed out that Germany would then feel free to pursue vigorously the aims she had been compelled to abandon temporarily out of consideration for French fears; that she would seek friends who would help her to regain her old strong position in Europe; and that she would be able to get these friends among those who objected to the domination of France and her allies.

Less than a month after the evacuation the German campaign is in full swing. All the submerged German policies are coming out again into the open and are being pressed vigorously. And Germany has found friends. One of these is Italy, which is pursuing a policy parallel to that of Germany in a striking manner. Another of these is likely to be Russia, for Berlin and Moscow have been carrying on new negotiations with the object of making close trade and political arrangements. Others undoubtedly will be the old allies of Germany, the small nations beaten in the war, which stand to profit in the campaign now being waged by Berlin and Rome.

It is a drive for a new deal in Europe—a deal which would upset the settlements made at the Paris Peace Conference. We shall hear a great deal more of it in the coming months and years, and there are likely to be some real upheavals in governments and alliances in consequence of it.

CHALLENGE TO BRIAND

The campaign has been put under way in dramatic fashion by replies which Berlin and Rome have made to the bid of Foreign Minister Briand of France for a United States of Europe. They had been invited to discuss the project, and they have done so. But they have taken advantage of the opportunity in a way which has been a surprise and shock to France. For, while professing to be friendly they have in reality laid down a challenge to French policy and supremacy which will be hard to meet.

And most strikingly they have shown that they are working in accord. While they disavow any consultation here are basic points that figure in both notes:

The Paris treaties shall be revised before there can be any general settlement.

That there must be general disarmament and not military guarantees of security; dependence being put on peace treaties.

That Russia, Turkey and the small beaten nations of Europe and the Near East must be taken into any union on a basis of equality.

That there must be consideration for the nations which would be outside a European union, meaning the United States and the Latin American states.

BASIC FRENCH POLICIES

Those who have followed French diplomacy since the World War will quickly realize that these points bring to issue basic French policies, to which all parties have clung tenaciously, and which are the basis of the French alliances on the continent.

This is particularly true of revision of the Paris treaties. It is elemental in French statesmanship that these must never be touched. One conference after another and one League of Nations meeting after another has fallen down on this point. Poland and the Little Entente are bound to France on the basis that all nations concerned will act together of there should be any attempt at revision.

In the matter of disarmament France and her allies have insisted that they must remain armed in superiority to other nations on the continent until some system is devised which will assure them of complete safety if they should be attacked by their neighbors. They have held that this system must depend on a military force and not merely on treaties for disarmament.

These allies have also stood against Russia, so long as it is intent upon revolutionary upsetting of border states, although inclined to be friendly with Turkey; and against any plan which would relieve the small conquered nations of handicaps put upon their freedom.

Finally, the very purpose of the Briand plan for a united Europe is to free the continent from interference by the United States and Latin America in its economic and political concerns.

German statesmen have assured France that there is no arrangement with Italy. In fact, it has been said by them that Mussolini has been rebuffed in efforts to strike up a close entente. But the recent visit of German warships to Italy, the fuss made over them, other demonstrations of friendship on both sides and now the identical policies in meeting the Briand campaign show that they are at least working on a very harmonious basis.

Italy, in fact, has reached the conclusion that her deepest interests lie in promoting the policies which Germany is trying to bring to reality. She wants the Paris treaties revised because, firstly, she has close understandings with Hungary and Bulgaria, and hopes to have one with Austria; and so needs to make these possible allies stronger; and, secondly, she feels that the treaties left her in the position of a loser in the war, and that they must be upset if she is to get her chance to expand. For one thing, she would like to have a revision which would take Syria away from France and give it to her, and would give her a voice in Morocco. Germany would revise the treaties so that she can close the Polish corridor and link up East Prussia with the Fatherland; so she can get back some parts of Upper Silesia from Poland; so she can absorb Austria; so she can regain some of her colonies, and so she can arm herself on an equality with France, unless France disarms.

So, whatever may be the assurances, it is to be expected that Rome and Berlin will continue to act in concert.

GERMANY AND RUSSIA

It is also significant that these two capitals are found acting unitedly in demanding that Russia shall be brought within any union. For Germany has been pushing very hard recently to get on a friendly economic and political basis with Moscow and there are indications that the negotiations are approaching a successful issue.

What they are endeavoring to do is to revive the Treaty of Rapallo, which has existed for more than seven years, and has bound the two nations to an entente; but which had lapsed because of Russian unfriendliness in the radical revival of the last2 three years, and because Foreign Minister Stresemann was pursuing a western policy and did not want to be hampered by any attachment to the Bolsheviki.

Now, however, Foreign Minister Curtius is pursuing a pro-Russian policy and he and the Moscowk Foreign Ministry have gone so far as to issue a joint statement containing these points:

A mutual pledge of noninterference in the domestic affairs of either country and avoidance of any foreign policy which will mean mutual estrangement.

Close co-operation in trade and industry and realization of a solidarity of interests.

Following this there have been economic and financal negotiations and it is the hope of German leaders that they will have a large part in the development of Russia along the lines of Stalin's five-year plan.

BRITAIN UNEASY

These developments are having a marked effect on official and other opinion in France and Britain. If there is to be a German-Russian-Italian combination, loose or tight, there will be a demand for a renewal of the old Franco-British entente.

That entente was ruptured after the World War, when the Lloyd George government pursued a pro-German and pro-Italian policy, but it was renewed when the Conservatives came into power. The chief reason for its renewal was the German-Russian entente. As I have told before, the British military chiefs at that time concded there was a real menace in such a combination and decided that the first line of British defense must be established at the Rhine. The entente was broken again when the Labor government came into power in London and started to pursue a policy of friendship with the Socialistic government in Berlin.

Now even the Labor government is shaking in its friendship with Berlin because of the way the Socialists have been driven out of authority by the Conservatives; and if the British Tories come back they are bound to help France offset the German-Rusdan entente. The two nations will be drawn together, for they are the great empires which would be threatened by the new combination and their interests are identical in defending the Paris treaties and in keeping Russia from breaking into the Near East and Southern Asia.

FIRST BATTLE LOOMS

It is probable that the first battle in the campaign will be fought within the League of Nations at the annual meeting in September, and that the German and Italian notes are merely the opening skirmishes in this engagement. Both the notes lay stress on the League as the arbiter and the center of peace arrangements.

Germany is taking a shrewd position in this particular. There is treaty authority for bringing before the League proposals to do away with treaties which are no longer suitable, and the whole peace structure can be challenged there. It is also possible to bring up the German demand for return of colonies. Disarmament is already a live subject in the proceedings of this body, and there is a German demand on file for general reduction of arms or permission for disarmed nations to strengthen themselves.

And we shall see a very different—a very aggressive—German delegation at the next League meeting.

Strike Tie-up of Ireland's Rail Lines Foreseen

DUBLIN (Irish Free State) July 19. (AP)—The shadow of a general railway strike tonight hung over Ireland with not less than 600 transport workers already out.

The executive committee of the National Union of Railwaymen will arrive in Dublin today. Unless some way is found out of the present strike deadlock of omnibus workers whose demands for union recognition have been spurned, a call for a complete tie-up seems inevitable.

The physical situation of the rail strike remained unchanged tonight. Dublin suburban services are paralyzed.

Pasadenan Weds Doctor in Paris

PARIS, July 19. (AP)—Mrs. Suzanne Bransford Emery-Holmes of Pasadena, Cal., formerly of Salt Lake City, and Dr. Radovan Nedelkov Delitch were married today at the City Hall of the Sixteenth Ward. Their religious marriage will take place tomorrow in the Russian-Greek Orthodox Church.

Dr. Delitch is a Serbian physician long resident in Paris. The couple met in New York two years ago while Dr. Delitch was connected with the Fifth-avenue Hospital.

...SHAMPTON (Ind.) July 19. ...Seeking relief from the ...publicity that has been theirs ...since marriage four months ...ago, Alfred Cecil Durban, ...ex-London newsboy, ...and his bride, Miss Vivienne Huntington Durban, 20, a reputed English heiress and the great-grandniece of the late Daniel D. Platt, ...former president of Logansport, and ...United States Senator at one time, have taken up residence in a ...small two-room furnished apartment here. The couple came here ...from Toronto, where the young ...man entered upon his apprenticeship as an electrician. They expect to make Logansport their permanent home. Durban seeks employment here to complete his apprenticeship.

"Throughout the three months we lived in Toronto we were subjected to continuous publicity that became a bore to us," the Durbans stated. "We were happy to get away and continue to be happy together and now seek relief from the publicity, so that our happiness as a married couple may not be interrupted."

The two explained that, while Mrs. Durban was reputed as an heiress, the estate was made up of real estate from which there was but little income.

FREE RHINELAND HAILS ITS CHIEF

Speyer Warmly Welcomes Von Hindenburg

Frantic Cheers Resound as President Appears

Octogenarian Hale and Well on Five-Day Trip

SPEYER (Germany) July 19. (AP) President Von Hindenburg's first day in the liberated Rhineland was the occasion for the warmest reception accorded any German in this ancient city since the republic was founded.

From early morning, when the Presidential car pulled into the railway station and until his departure for Ludwigshafen, Worms and Mayence in the early afternoon, crowds such as Speyer has seldom witnessed thronged the streets and burst into frantic applause every time the revered head of the nation showed himself.

The octogenarian President surprised everybody by the erectness of his bearing and the firmness of his voice. He looked fit and well.

In the President's entourage are Foreign Minister Julius Curtius, the President's son and aide; Col. Oscar Von Hindenburg and his political secretary, Dr. Otto Meissner. The President again scorned taking a physician along.

From Speyer President Von Hindenburg went by automobile through the Palatinate to Ludwigshafen, from where a Rhine steamer will carry him via Worms to Mayence. His entire trip is to consume five days.

EGYPT REVOLT PLAN APPROVED

Wafda Party United Behind Move to Depose King

Army and Police Hold Key to Strained Situation

Three-quarters of Military Counted on to Bolt

LONDON, July 19. (Exclusive)—News reached the Egyptian agent in London today that the Wafda leaders have now consulted all branches throughout Egypt and have obtained the unanimous approval of the program for the meeting of Parliament Monday to demand the abdication of King Fuad or to surrender a large part of his powers. Much depends on the attitude taken by the King and the loyalty to him of the army and the police.

It is stated here that the Wafda party is relying on the support of at least three-quarters of the army, only the guards' regiments remaining loyal to the King. The party is not so sure of the police as the higher officers are all Europeans and are expected to remain loyal to the King.

WOMAN WED OFTEN BUT ALWAYS TO SAME MAN

JERSEY CITY (N. J.) July 19. (Exclusive)—The thrill of getting married so appeals to pretty Mrs. Martha L. Triebel, 21 years of age, that she has wed the same man four times within the past six months.

She began her marrying career January 19, last, when she eloped from her home at Woodcliff, N. J., to become the bride of Ernest Triebel of Brooklyn, N. Y. The secret ceremony was performed by Rev. Charles Truby of the English Lutheran Church in Jersey City. A month later the minister, at the bride's request, repeated the ceremony. Some weeks after that she decided it might be an even greater thrill to be married in some distant city, and so the pair got married again in New Haven, Ct. Last week they sampled the type of ceremony performed in New York City's municipal chapel, it was learned today.

SLASH IN BEEF PRICES DUE

Packers Loaded With Prime Carcasses, They Say

Wholesale Meats Now Down to Prewar Level

Reduction by Butchers May be Looked for Next

CHICAGO, July 19. (Exclusive)—Larger stocks of high-quality beef in packers' coolers and heavy shipments of corn-fed beef cattle are forcing down current wholesale prices, according to leaders in the industry here. Wholesale beef prices are now at prewar levels, the packers say.

Butchers ought to be passing the lower prices along to the consumers, stockyards officials said. Retail prices of meats in many cases have been lowered in recent months, but they are due for a still greater fall to get in line with the stores on hand.

Officers of leading Chicago packing concerns said that producers of beef cattle, thinking prices might hold up, kept their cattle on the farms, on pasture and corn, and now are obliged to ship regardless of loss in price. These beef animals are of the highest quality.

WATER TRAVEL GAIN REPORTED

Panama-Pacific Agent Gives Out Statement

Says Volume East and West Exceeds 1929

Liner Pennsylvania Brings in Heavy List

BY WAYNE B. CAVE

Recession in other endeavors notwithstanding, more voyagers are traveling between California and New York than during the corresponding record at this time last year, according to Winfield Thompson, field agent for the Panama-Pacific Line.

This flattering showing, he said, applies in both directions. Evidence bearing out such report was apparent yesterday in the arrival of the company's electric liner Pennsylvania from New York via Havana, Panama and San Diego.

The liner transported 760 passengers since she departed her New York dock. Of them 697 were destined for California ports. Sixty-three disembarked at San Diego, while Los Angeles received the largest share, 340, with 237 continuing to San Francisco. The 627 entering this port yesterday were the largest number ever brought into this port on an offshore passenger liner.

"The fact that the Pennsylvania and our other two intercoastal liners are new and elaborate accounts for some increase, naturally," Thompson conceded, "but the increasing preference for sea travel generally, is obvious," he observed.

Sailings of Panama Pacific ships westbound for several voyages ahead are booked almost to capacity already, he declared, while the eastbound migration is declared almost equally prolific.

CHINESE LAD AGAIN HALTED BY ALIEN BAR

Joseph Mong, who, immigration officials at numerous American ports declare is the most persistent immigrant they have ever encountered, failed again yesterday to enter the United States via Los Angeles Harbor. Joseph, who is 20 years of age, and is the son of a Chinese father and a Porto Rican mother, signed on the Pennsylvania in New York a fortnight since as an engineers' messman and yesterday attempted to pay off at Los Angeles Harbor.

But immigration inspectors recognised him as the lad who stowed away three years ago on the Panama-Pacific liner Manchuria at Panama in an attempt to enter the port. Sent back to Balboa, he again made a similar attempt board the liner California in 1928 and was again turned back. Plans are under way for this third deportation to Balboa.

One hundred and eighty-three vessels arrived at the port last week, a gain of three ships over the previous week. By trades there were seventy-six passenger carriers, fifty-one freighters, forty-six tankers and ten lumbermen.

Lumber receipts totaled 15,104,000 feet, a decrease of 294,000 feet. Oil shipments last week were 2,074,342 barrels, a decrease of 600,000 barrels.

Lieut. Ingram C. Sowell, just relieved as commander of the destroyer Wasmuth and assigned to instruction duty at the Great Lakes (Ill.) naval training station, is at the port as the house guest of his brother-in-law and Annapolis classmate, Lieutenant-Commander James E. Crutchfield, in charge of the local Navy Hydrographic Office.

Signatures representing the city of Los Angeles and the four other railroad companies operating at the harbor, were affixed to an interlocking agreement yesterday, looking to the permanent entry of the Santa Fe system into the port with connections to the Municipal Belt Line. It will permit the Santa Fe to cross Southern Pacific and Pacific Electric tracks east of Truck Boulevard. The Harbor Department is to build the track extending the connection under the Anaheim viaduct to the Belt Line at the McFarland-street yards. Much of the expenditure, $300,000 some of which has been completed, will be repaid to the city, which will retain control. The Santa Fe has had access to the port over a temporary grade crossing at Anaheim Boulevard several years.

George Brown, principal surveyor for the American Bureau of Shipping at Balboa, Canal Zone, for nine years, passed through here yesterday, en route to Seattle to assume that office.

Panama Mail liner Colombia brought more than 100 travelers yesterday from New York and Central America. Among them was Col. Douglas McCaskey, United States Army, on leave from Washington, D. C., for a visit to San Francisco. Narciso Sol, executive of the Salvador Railways, was a passenger.

Julius Perez, veteran customs broker of Guy B. Barham's harbor staff, is at San Pedro General Hospital where for a week surgeons have staved off an operation for an intestinal disorder.

ZIONISTS NEED MILLION MORE

Twelve Colonies Now Able to Support Themselves

Jerusalem Project Has Cost $10,000,000 So Far

Ten Thousand Jews Now Live Under Colony Plan

JERUSALEM, July 19. (AP)—Contributions of $1,250,000 will be needed before all the fifty-nine Zionist colonies can become self-supporting, says the Colonization Department of the Jewish Agency.

Twelve of the fifty-nine are now self-supporting, while another twelve will soon become so. So far $10,000,000 has been spent on the Jewish settlement plan, of which the Keren Hayesod, the financial agent of the Jewish agency, has contributed half, and the Keren Kayemeth, the Zionist land purchasing agency, the other half.

Approximately 10,000 people live in the colonies out of a total of 40,000 in all the Jewish agricultural settlements.

Prewar Liquor Goes a-Begging

NEW YORK, July 19. (Exclusive)—Murray Hulburt, an attorney, has a white elephant on his hands. It is in the form of 1300 cases of genuine prewar Scotch whisky, of which he is custodian in the settlement of a large estate. Unable to get a permit to take it legally, he applied to the Treasury Department, through Senator Royal Copeland, to take it off his hands.

SPIDER BITES PROVE FATAL

Man and Cat Victims of "Black Widow"

Northern California Persons Attacked By Insect

State Authorities Suggest War on Pests

SACRAMENTO, July 19. (AP)—With a number of residents of Northern California recently bitten, one case resulting fatally, State authorities issued a warning against the "black widow," a venomous spider. The death of a man at Woodland recently was attributed to poisoning resulting from a spider bite. Other persons have suffered from the same cause.

The "black widow" also attacks animals. A cat owned by Mr. and Mrs. Orin Servis, Gridley, recently died half an hour after being bitten on the tongue by a spider.

In case one is bitten by the spider, summon medical aid as speedily as possible, advised Ashley C. Browne, entomologist of the State Department of Agriculture. "Pending his arrival the wound may be treated as though it had been made by a rattlesnake, applying a tourniquet above the incision if the bite is on the leg or arm. Induce bleeding and cauterize the wound thoroughly."

Browne advocated destruction of webs and nests and a general clean-up of premises where the spider is found. Kerosene and scalding water and lye will help destroy the webs, Browne said.

The spider is found throughout California.

NEWS OF SOUTHERN COUNTIES

LAD LOST IN HILLS FOUND

Little Carl Rinehart Safe Seven Miles from Camp

El Centro Boy Discovered Under Tree Asleep

San Diego Policeman First to Trace Youngster

SAN DIEGO, July 19.—Carl Rinehart, 5½-year-old son of R. W. and Mrs. Rinehart of El Centro, was found today seven and one-half miles south of Cuyamaca Lake, near an Indian reservation, by Nathaniel McHorney, Jr., San Diego police officer, on vacation at the police lodge in Cuyamaca. The boy was scratched and hungry, but otherwise unhurt, and was asleep under a bush when found. How the boy, crippled since birth, managed to stray so far from his family's camp near Cuyamaca Lodge has not been ascertained.

ARMY PLANES SEARCH

Five army planes, commanded by Capt. E. N. Savage of Rockwell Field, continued to circle slowly around the forested area, and apparently could not understand signals from the ground that the boy had been found safe.

The boy overheard his brothers, 13 and 10 years of age, respectively, planning a before-breakfast hike up Cuyamaca Mountain and followed them at 5 a.m. yesterday, it was said. His continued absence finally led to a search being instituted which lasted throughout the night and which drew twenty-five San Diego newspaper carrier boys, enjoying a vacation at Cuyamaca, many Boy Scouts, deputy sheriffs, forest rangers and a detachment of marines from the Marine Corps base here, into an intensive effort to locate the boy.

The distraction of the lad's parents was described graphically by Deputy Sheriff Earl Riley, who spent yesterday and last night in a futile search for the boy with Deputy Sheriffs Roy Barnes and Chuck Cameron. "The poor, distracted mother would go out and crawl through the brush until she nearly fainted from exhaustion," Riley related. "She would return to camp only when forced to by thirst, and then would tell how she had heard her baby crying to her in the woods. The father, too, searched until exhaustion forced him to halt."

FAMILY HAPPY AGAIN

The family reunion was a happy one. All fatigue and worries of the search were forgotten when Carl was clasped again in his mother's arms. Then she prepared a meal which would have sufficed for all the searchers—and it was all for Carl.

Hoping to attract the boy, deputy sheriffs built a fire on an island in the lake last night. Gen. Dunlap and Col. Harry Lay, as well as Capt. Savage, responded immediately to his requests for assistance. Sheriff Ed Cooper said today in lauding the co-operation accorded his office by military forces here.

Jail Doors in Pasadena Open; No One Within

PASADENA, July 19.—Crime business in this city went bankrupt today when for the first time in ten years the City Jail doors stood wide open and the jail police guard was told to "go home and sleep."

Not a single prisoner has been booked for the last twenty-four hours, and because no case stood on the docket, police court was not held this morning. Veteran police officers who shouted "Jail break!" when they were startled to see the yawning jail doors as they came to work, were laughed at by their superior officers.

At the present time extra crews of workmen are rushing construction of a new $125,000 jail on North Broadway which is being erected to take care of the "overcrowded" condition of the old jail, condemned five times by the county grand jury.

RETIRED MERCHANT OF CLEVELAND DIES

PASADENA, July 19.—William J. Cardie, retired Cleveland dry goods merchant, died last night at his residence, 1564 Blanche street. As a result of the shock of her husband's death, Mrs. Cardie, who has been recovering from a serious illness, has had a relapse and is critically ill today at the Cardie residence.

Mr. Cardie was a former official of the Root-McBride Company of Cleveland, and of the Walker Dry-goods Company of St. Louis.

Besides his widow, Cardie leaves a sister, Miss Elizabeth Cardie of this city. Funeral arrangements are held in abeyance pending the outcome of Mrs. Cardie's illness.

DREDGEMAN FOUND DEAD

Lifeless Body of Fred Schultz Discovered in Two Feet of Water at Newport Bay

NEWPORT BEACH, July 19.—Found to be missing from his duties on the dredge owned by the Newport Boat Builders, Inc., at 6:30 a.m. today, the body of Fred Schultz, 40 years of age, was discovered an hour later in two feet of water near the dredge in Newport Bay.

At 6:30 a.m. he was seen by fellow workers performing his regular duties aboard the dredge and when he could not be located an hour later, an investigation was made. John Troutweir and M. F. Meyers, fellow-workers, discovered the body.

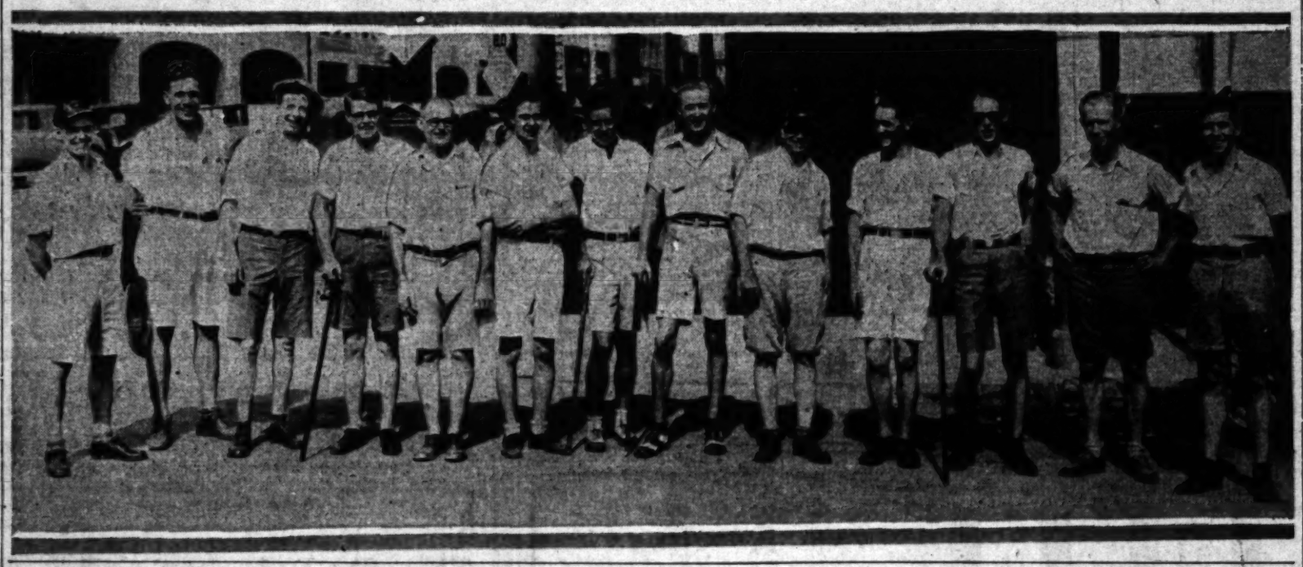
Schultz, a disabled World War veteran, was subject to epilepsy and it is believed that he fell into the water when stricken with an attack. Dr. Elizabeth Tock, county autopsy surgeon, performed an autopsy this afternoon at the Grooms & Riesenberg funeral home in Costa Mesa. Coroner Brown will hold an inquest at 10 a.m. Tuesday.

The deceased lived on a boat anchored in the bay. Authorities are endeavoring to locate relatives and have wired the Adjutant-General in Washington for further information. His discharge papers have not been located.

F. W. Crocker, head of the life-saving department, and crew, worked over the victim for two hours without results.

SHORT STORY TELLS WEATHER CONDITIONS IN EL CENTRO

EL CENTRO, July 19.—When the temperature goes to 112 deg. the well-dressed young man can wear anything he wants to—in Imperial Valley. At least this is the theory that prompted a score of members of the El Centro Junior Chamber of Commerce to appear on the streets here today in abbreviated attire. Following the lead of Frank Bowles, KXO announcer, the group adopted the "short-wave length" style in men's trousers, which consisted of shearing off standard length pants at a point approximately two inches above the knees. Bowles has succeeding in bolstering up the courage of his proteges to the point where they can now parade down the main street in their shorts and scorn the snickering remarks of less courageous members of the male fraternity. Those in the picture, from left to right, are Virgil Lewis, radio dealer; Jack Paulzine, creamery salesman; Frank Bowles, KXO announcer; Junior McNutt, clothing salesman; W. L. Cowan of Cowan & Clayton, dry cleaners; Warren Woody, grocery salesman; K. Richmond, plumber; Forrest Ferris, salesman; O. L. Michael, Remington-Rand manager; Paul Pace, salesman; Elon Berkman, Cowan & Clayton employee; Jerry Robertson, automobile salesman; Roy Sweeney, photographer. [Hetzel photo]



GRAPE FESTIVAL OBSERVED

Coachella Valley Turns Out En Masse to Second Annual Celebration, Trading Post in Indio

INDIO, July 19.—The Coachella Valley turned out en masse last night for the second annual grape festival at the Trading Post. The celebration marks the practical completion of the grape season in the valley, which this year has been generally satisfactory, both in quality of fruits and prices.

There was a large display of valley-grown grapes, the Big Four ranch carrying off first honors. In the box-making contest J. G. Miller was awarded the prize, having made seventeen and one-half perfect boxes in ten minutes. The grape-picking contest was won by Mrs. Margaret Crosby of Fresno.

In the bathing beauty contest honors were all won by local girls, Miss Lois McPheeters of Coachella winning first prize, Miss Dorothy Dean of Indio, second, and Mrs. Marilyn Mason Jones, third.

Editor's Life Threatened by Asthma Attack

VENTURA, July 19. — Oscar Conklin, editor of the Ventura Free Press, was reported recovering rapidly today at the Big Sisters Hospital, where he was taken after an asthmatic attack which held him unconscious from 5 o'clock last evening to 1 o'clock this morning.

His condition was considered grave for several hours last night and oxygen was administered to carry him through.

The editor was stricken while telephoning from his residence, 608 East Meta street. He was discovered by the housekeeper, who summoned aid. Conklin is expected to return to his office tomorrow.

Mrs. Conklin returned today from Cedar Pines Park upon news of her husband's condition.

LARGE SCHOOL TAKES PLACE OF BUNGALOWS

CAHUENGA PARK, July 19.—Five of the seven large bungalows which made up the old Cahuenga Park elementary school are being moved from the grounds, having given way to the commodious school that has been erected on the campus, and which will be furnished and made ready for occupation by the new term. Two of the bungalows will be retained to be used as a school cafeteria and as a building for the teaching of manual arts. The new school has been designated as the Dickens-street school by the Los Angeles Board of Education.

POLICEMAN GIVES HIS LIFEBLOOD

His Veins Supply Strength to Wife of Fellow-Officer After Operation

GLENDALE, July 19.—Three policemen, Julian H. Carter, Charles H. Van Dermeer and William H. Mitterling, last night volunteered to give their blood to help save the life of Mrs. Albert Wickham, wife of Desk Sergeant Wickham, after surgeons at the Glendale Sanatorium announced that immediate transfusion was necessary to save Mrs. Wickham's life after an operation.

Van Dermeer, the first to be examined, was led into the operating-room after surgeons had pronounced him physically perfect, while Carter and Mitterling sat outside in the police automobile and waited to see whether their contributions would be needed.

Reports from the hospital today indicated that Mrs. Wickham is gaining steadily and that additional transfusions should be required, but if they should be, Carter and Mitterling say their offer still stands. Other officers have also notified the hospital that they will contribute their blood if continued transfusions should be required.

HERMOSA PLANS PROGRESS

John A. Glass, President of Chamber of Commerce, Outlines Plans for Future Development

HERMOSA BEACH, July 19.—The newly elected board of directors of the Hermosa Beach Chamber of Commerce, inducted into office in the presence of 200 members and friends of the organization at the annual membership banquet, faces a year of highly constructive activity, according to John A. Glass, president.

A program of city planning, under direction of a planning commission to be named under the ordinance recently adopted through initiation of the chamber; a campaign of highway development looking to the improvement of major boulevard entrances from the east and north; and a comprehensive campaign of community advertising, are among the many activities outlined.

Reorganized five months ago, the chamber has already established a record of real accomplishment. A factor emphasized by President Glass is the harmonious and cordial relationship existing between the City Council and the chamber. "It is not the desire nor the purpose of the chamber to assume or to usurp authority," Glass said, "but to work as a representative body of citizens, looking only to the best interests of their community, harmoniously and in close co-operation with the constituted authorities. With such co-operation, we can make Hermosa Beach one of the finest cities in the world in which to work, play and live."

The new directorate comprises, in addition to Glass, a president of long standing, Charles D. Jones, Superintendent of Schools, first vice-president; Frank A. JEWELS IN TRUNK, NOT IN ROBBERY

Glendale Woman Phones of Her Loss to Detectives; Then She Looks Again

GLENDALE, July 19.—Police who thought they were on the trail of a big jewel robbery last night were just assembling their detecting accessories and equipment to start for the home of Mrs. D. McIlmoile of 712 West Ivy street, when the telephone rang a second time to bring the news that the missing gems had been found. Mrs. McIlmoile, it appears, had concealed the jewels, valued at $1000, in one of her trunks, and had later moved them to another trunk and allowed the transfer to slip her memory.

When she went to the first hiding-place last night and found her diamonds missing, she summoned the detective bureau, and while waiting for the sleuths to get there she happened to look in the second trunk and found the missing valuables.

KNIFE CRUISES IN SHARK HEAD

William Carruthers Stabs Huge Fish With Pocket Blade and It Swims off With It, Later Returning After His Catch, When He Pulls Weapon From Wound

SANTA BARBARA, July 19—How a knife came back after it had voyaged beneath the billowy sea, is told by Assistant Postmaster McCaffrey.

William Carruthers, clerk at the postoffice, was fishing off the Gaviota wharf. He and a companion were having a run of good luck and had two sacks lowered into the water on either side of the pier, containing their catch. Looking down from the deck of the wharf, Carruthers saw a long whiptail shark nosing around a sack. He drew up the sack and the shark left, but only to make for the other bag of fish. Carruthers, getting down near the water's surface, drew his hunting knife, and as the shark followed the sack of fish toward the surface of the sea, he sank the knife blade into the shark's head. It turned and swam away, taking the knife along. An hour afterward, two fishermen in a boat some distance from the wharf excitedly called across the water that "there's a big shark out here with a knife in its head." A half-hour rolled away and here came the shark after one of the Carruthers fish bags. It nosed the bag to get at the fish, apparently none the worse for the knife.

"Reaching down, I seized the knife by its handle and withdrew it, and away swims the fish, frisky as a boy just out of school for a summer's vacation," Carruthers informed his fellow-workers.

Carruthers says the shark was af least eight feet long. That section abounds in these big sharks, which are harmless except to a bag of fish.

LIQUOR-SQUAD HEADS FIGURE IN TRANSFERS

VAN NUYS, July 19.—Following orders from central headquarters in Los Angeles to Capt. C. A. Hodson, head of the valley division of police, Sergt. Paul Harrison was appointed head of the San Fernando Valley liquor detail to succeed Sergt. R. J. Chambers, who has been reassigned to the San Pedro division, where he is expected to direct activities of the harbor district squad in cleaning up seaport liquor-law violations. It is the policy of the police department, it is stated, not to retain liquor-investigating policemen too long in any particular vicinity where they are likely to become known. Other police changes were made yesterday. Patrolman Clifford Kneeland was transferred from the valley to Venice. Officer J. H. Sparks was changed from the local dry squad to patrol duty.

MYSTERY IN GUN BATTLE SOLVED

Battle of Shots in Home During Owner's Absence Due to Closet Fire

HUNTINGTON PARK, July 19.—A gun battle in an unoccupied house was the mysterious discovery last night for neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Cranford, 3412 Hope street. Friends called the couple from a near-by party, also the fire department.

The scene of the bombardment was found to be in a gun closet of the Cranford home. The head of the household had been cleaning his firearms and left an oil-soaked rag lying near a box of cartridges. The rag ignited from spontaneous combustion and soon the cartridges began to pop. Principal damage was to the guns.

Fire Protection Cost Deplored in Baldwin Park

BALDWIN PARK, July 19.—Petitions protesting against the $19,845 fire-protection budget for 1930-31, as suggested by the County Fire Warden for the Baldwin Park County Fire Protection District, are now being circulated in this community in an effort to influence the Board of Supervisors to reduce the proposed expenditure for the district as well as the tax levy.

The proposed budget to cover expenses of the fire district for the year from July, 1930, to July, 1931, totals nearly $20,000, and it is estimated that a tax levy of 50 cents will be required to produce this amount. Besides the $19,845 budget, there is at present a balance of $9000 in the general reserve fund which will be required to pay operating expenses from July, 1930, until the next tax money is available in January, 1931, it is cited by protestants.

According to the petition, "when this district was formed it was estimated that it could be run on a tax rate of approximately 20 cents per $1 valuation. Although the assessed valuation of property within the district has increased several fold, the rate has increased very greatly beyond the estimate until last year the rate was 55 cents, and in spite of the additional raise in valuation of the district it is estimated that the tax rate for the following year will be 50 cents. We believe that an adequate fire protection for this district could be maintained by eliminating two of the paid firemen."

Suffocation in Box Car Held Cause of Death

MEXICALI, July 19.—After a complete investigation today, Mexicali police reported that Albert Montague, American, whose dead body was found in an empty box car early yesterday morning, probably died of suffocation and heat rather than from gunshot wounds as was at first reported. Investigation of the injuries which led the police to believe the man had been shot showed that they were superficial in character and probably had no direct bearing on the man's death.

According to the theory advanced today, Montague crawled into the box car while under the influence of narcotics and the extreme heat and lack of fresh air, combined with the drugs, caused his death.

He was buried in the cemetery in Calexico this morning under the direction of his two brothers, George and Robert of Los Angeles. Messages have been received from the man's mother and widow in Nogales. Montague was a World War veteran and the American Legion post at Phoenix requested Calexico Legionnaires to give Montague a soldier's burial.

RADIO PLAYS MAJOR PART IN CAMPAIGN

Detroit Recall of Mayor Battle, Now Near Close, Waged by Broadcast

DETROIT, July 19. (AP)—Detroit's shortest and bitterest political battle, conducted almost entirely by radio, entered its final phase tonight.

The issue, to be decided next Tuesday, is whether Mayor Bowles shall be recalled on grounds of incompetency.

Two weeks of intensive campaigning over the city's broadcasting stations have brought conflicting accounts of affairs in the City Hall. On one hand are the sponsors of the recall movement, charging the Mayor with tolerating lawlessness, ignoring campaign pledges and surrounding himself with politically selfish lieutenants, while on the other is the administration contending it has worked for the good of the city, reduced taxes and provided efficient law enforcement, only to fall victim to "selfish, greedy interests."

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19. (AP)—William Thiede, 33 years of age, former Fresno chemist, was sentenced to McNeil Island penitentiary for two years today by Federal Judge Louderback, after he had pleaded guilty to sending obscene letters to a San Francisco girl.

NYE CONCLUDES NORRIS HEARING

Nebraska Grocer's Candidacy Not in Good Faith

Regarded Plot to Defeat Incumbent Senator

Broken Bow Man Ruled Off Primary Ballot

BROKEN BOW (Neb.) July 19. (AP)—Senator Nye, chairman of the Senate committee investigating campaign expenditures, late today concluded the hearing here concerning the filing of a second George W. Norris for the Republican nomination for United States Senator with the statement the candidacy of the Broken Bow grocery-store manager "was not one of good faith in any degree."

The grocer filed as a candidate against the senior Nebraska Senator, George W. Norris of McCook, who is seeking re-election. Chief Justice Goss of the Nebraska Supreme Court last night barred the name of the Broken Bow Norris from the ballot of the August 12 primary, declaring his filing was received after the time limit for accepting filings had expired.

GOOD FAITH QUESTIONED

A score of witnesses was questioned by Senator Nye at the hearing today. He planned to return to Lincoln and announce he would hold private conferences there tomorrow regarding the Norris case. After the trip to Lincoln, he said he would go to Chicago to resume the Ruth Hanna McCormick hearing where it was halted.

"I can only say the candidacy of Norris of Broken Bow was not one of good faith in any degree and we must continue the investigation if we are to carry out the intent of the Congressional act permitting primary election investigations."

He did not amplify that statement.

FILING CALLED PLOT

Investigating the personal affairs of the grocer, the Senator was told the Broken Bow man had a bank balance of only 41 cents when he left this city after filing as a candidate for the Senatorial nomination.

J. S. Ream, State Master of the Grange, testified he believed the filing was a plot to defeat Senator Norris in his campaign for re-election.

A. Paul Johnson, an attorney who assisted the grocer in arranging his papers for filing, denied any knowledge of financial transactions in reference to his candidacy.

Whereabouts of the grocer was not known tonight. His legal adviser, William E. Shuman, in Omaha, told newspaper men he did not receive Senator Nye's telegram directing him to appear at Broken Bow with his client for the hearing.

GOVERNMENT WATCHES CHIHUAHUA ELECTION

MEXICO CITY, July 19. (AP)—Gen Joaquin Amaro, Secretary of War left by airplane today for Chihuahua City to watch over the gubernatorial elections tomorrow. He was accompanied by two officers of President Ortiz Rubio's military staff.

Military authorities in Chihuahua have taken precautionary measures to preserve order during the voting. There has been strong political feeling in the State capital since the recent clash between Provisional Governor Almada and an opposing faction. A new provisional Governor has since been appointed.

POLICE LOOKING FOR FIANCE OF DANCER

MINNEAPOLIS, July 19. (AP)—Spurred to action by the tearful pleading of a young dancer, police tonight pressed a search for an eastern hospital technician, who disappeared after flying to Minneapolis to marry her. The young woman is Evelyn Rosita Radell, Spanish dancer of Mexico City, who had appeared on the stage in the East with a leading orchestra. The man is Thurman A. Marque, employed until recently as an attendant at McLean Hospital in Waverly, Mass.

They said they are en route to Hollywood to fill a theatrical appearance contract and expect to resume their flight at dawn tomorrow.

OIL STOCKS GROW LIKE SNOWBALL

Rockefeller $3,640,311 Trust Worth $18,252,937 in Thirteen Years

NEW YORK, July 19. (AP)—A report filed in Supreme Court today disclosed the $3,640,311 trust fund established by John D. Rockefeller in 1917 for his daughter, Mrs. Alta Rockefeller Prentice, has a present market value of $18,252,937.

The report, filed by Sidney C. Crane as referee to take the accounting of the Equitable Trust Company as trustee said also that Mrs. Prentice had received $6,693,-320 as income from the fund.

The trust consisted of 356,350 shares of Standard Oil Company of Indiana, quoted at 51 1-4 today on the New York Curb Exchange. The increase was due in large measure to stock split-ups, which in one case amounted to 150 per cent.

Eastern Realty Man Kills Self

NEW YORK, July 19. (AP)—Harry S. Black, chairman of the board of the United States Realty Corporation, died tonight in his home at Allondale near Huntington, L. I., from a bullet wound in the head which police said was self-inflicted.

Black was found in bed by a servant. Police said he held a revolver in his hand from which two shots had been fired and there was one bullet wound in his head.

"SAFEST" AIRPLANE DESTROYED BY FIRE

CLEVELAND, July 19. (AP)—The Curtiss airplane Tanager, winner of the $100,000 Guggenheim prize for being the world's safest airplane, was destroyed by fire at the Thistledown Race Track near here late today during a demonstration. The fire occurred after the engine went dead when Pilot Leroy McGrady attempted to take off for a third time. Sparks from the motor ignited grass near by and it, in turn, set fire to the plane.

SOCIALISTS CHARGE GRAFT

SCHENECTADY (N. Y.) July 19. (AP)—Asserting the New York City administration is honeycombed with graft and corruption, the Socialist party State convention here today asked Gov. Roosevelt to call an extraordinary session of the legislature to appoint a multi-partisan commission to investigate the administration of the metropolis.

BOY RELEASED FROM DUNGEON

Lad 10 Years of Age Found Chained in Basement

Police Begin Hunt for His Father and Stepmother

Child Kept Prisoner Daily Without Food or Water

DETROIT, July 19. (AP)—A 10-year-old boy was found today chained to a post in the dark basement of the home where he lived with his father and stepmother.

Rescued by police, the lad, Clifford Peters, told them he had been chained up for more than twelve hours every day since school was dismissed early in June and prior to that he was confined in the basement dungeon on Saturdays for about a year.

An investigation by Sergt. Miller Gerou, he said, revealed the boy's father, John, works as a night watchman and sleeps by day. His stepmother, Rose, left home for her work each morning at 6 o'clock, the sergeant said, chaining the boy before she left and releasing him when she returned at 6:30 p.m.

Police found no provision for food or water for the boy.

Neither Peters nor his wife had returned to the house this evening and a search for them was started.

BUILDING-LOAN GROUP REPORTS

Consolidated Statement of Associations Issued

Liquid Position Improves in First Quarter

State Institutions Take in $300,000 a Day

Consolidated statement of condition of California's 235 building-loan associations as of March 31, last, reveals that, due to the fact that there was only a small number of real-estate loans placed during the first quarter of the current year, the institutions as a group materially strengthened their liquid position.

The statement, just released by State Building and Loan Commissioner Whitmore, was issued yesterday by the California Building-Loan League through Neill Davis, its secretary.

CASH ACCOUNT JUMPS

While the total combined resources of the institutions increased $23,762,252, or 5 per cent, during the first quarter to an aggregate of $500,958,368 on March 31, last, loans showed a gain of but $8,522,082, or 2 per cent, from the period December 31, 1929, to March 31, amounting to a total of $425,325,079 on the latter date. On the other hand, cash on hand amounted to $30,460,634 representing an increase for the three months of $13,905,122, or 73.5 per cent.

Contrasting with the increase of $23,762,252, or 5 per cent, in total resources the consolidated statement disclosed that the investment in investment certificate accounts climbed $24,400,778, or 6.8 per cent to a total of $391,041,767. Guarantee capital stock increased $1,115,401, or 5 per cent, to $23,026,615; undivided profits, $487,536, or 20 per cent, to $2,851,100, and surplus accounts of the guarantee stock associations, $541,656, or 8 per cent, to $7,303,428.

Making comparisons over a year's period, the report indicates that the associations show an average gain in resources for each quarter of $22,500,000 and an average increase for each business day of $300,000. The average net gain in the number of investors for each business day is about 381.

Interest and dividends paid out by the associations on investment certificates, membership shares and capital stock during the year under review is estimated to amount to about $32,000,000, which is $107,000 for each business day.

More than 88 per cent of the resources of the California associations are loaned on real estate to aid in the construction, purchase or refinancing of homes. The money released for circulation, it is pointed out, directly benefits architects, contractors, carpenters and other crafts-men such as plasterers, cement men, bricklayers, painters, electricians, etc. The funds are checked out of one of the city's banks, passed to the contractors and material dealers and eventually are back again in the various banks of the city.

Tile Company Orders Point Up

Increase in building construction activity predicted for the late summer months is becoming evident, a report from Gladding, McBean & Co., clay products manufacturers, Los Angeles, indicates.

Among recent large orders received by the company, George P. Packt, general sales manager, yesterday listed: Terra cotta facing of an orchid shade for the new Fox Theater and office buildings on Hill and on Broadway, between Sixth and Seventh; terra cotta of a green shade for the new Sun Realty and Finance Building at 639 South Hill street; terra cotta and face brick for the new Title and Trust Building, Phoenix, Ariz.; terra cotta for the California Bank addition on Spring, between Sixth and Seventh; terra cotta for the new Southern California Edison Building at Fifth and Grand, and 90,000 square feet of glazed roof tile for the Kamehameha High School at Honolulu. The company has also just completed terra-cotta facings for the new Eastern Outfitting, Stock Exchange and Banks-Huntley height-limit structures in Los Angeles.

Sheet and Tube Schedule Fixed

YOUNGSTOWN, July 19.—Youngstown Sheet and Tube Company's operations in the Youngstown district will remain unchanged next week at 60 per cent. Operations of Sharon Steel Hoop Company also will remain the same at 65 per cent with ingot production at 50 per cent, strip production at 60 per cent and sheet production at 80 per cent.

Two of the largest Youngstown steel fabricators will enter next week with no change in their production schedules. Truscon Steel Company's plant continues at capacity, while General Fireproofing Company's output will hold at approximately 10 per cent below this time a year ago. Carnegie Steel Company will open next week at 55 per cent, against 58 per cent this week.

MARKET STREET RAIL PROFITS REPORTED

INSTITUTE COURSES CHANGED

Local Exchange School Head Announces Shift for Coming Year

Los Angeles Stock Exchange Institute has drawn up a tentative schedule of courses for the ensuing year which contains some radical changes from the curriculum that has been followed to date, Edwin L. Harbach, president, announced yesterday.

The proposed changes include the dividing of the present course in "brokerage practice" into two separate classes of instructions; "stock exchange organization and procedure," to be offered in the first semester, and "brokerage practice," to be given in the second semester.

New courses to be offered during the coming term are "the work of the cashier's cage," a study which is being organized and sponsored by the Los Angeles Association of Investment House Cashiers, and "brokerage law," a course planned especially for partners and executives who desire to become familiar with the legal technicalities of the brokerage business. Other new courses are "the financial system of the United States" and the "selling of securities," which will be offered in the form of both an elementary and advanced course in salesmanship. Present plans also call for a class in "effective business correspondence" and in "public speaking."

SIGNAL PROGRAM ADVANCES

Natural Gasoline Unit Earnings to be Augmented by Its Crude Oil Production

BY DOUGLAS A. McKAY

Signal Oil and Gas Company, unaffected by the gasoline price war, is one organization within the petroleum industry of California whose earnings for the first half of the current year will approximate the results obtained in the same period of 1929. At that time the company reported net profits equivalent to $3.15 a share. The same amount of stock is now outstanding.

The earnings statement which will be released within the next two weeks should show profits but slightly under last year's figure due principally to the curtailment at Signal Hill, which in turn reduced runs to its casinghead plant there for the manufacture of natural gasoline. Recent completions, however, have again brought the plant up to the former operating capacity.

On the basis of $3 a share the company's annual rate of earnings is $6 a share or three times the current dividend of $2 a share. The current market price is five times this figure. For the full year 1929 the company reported $6.13 a share.

PROFITS INVESTED

The spread between the amount earned and the amount paid in dividends is being plowed back for a development program, benefits from which are expected to be derived in the very near future. A recent $2,500,000 convertible debenture issue was for the purpose of augmenting this expansion plan.

The first development of major importance was the completion a few days ago of the Signal-Appleford well out in the ocean at Elwood This well came in for an initial production of 1000 barrels. During the past six months Signal's crude-oil production, which from sixteen wells averaged around 2000 barrels daily under the proration program, constituted something like 11 per cent of its total earnings. This ratio is expected to be stepped up to around 25 per cent before the end of the year due to other drilling activities

While it has not been announced, it is understood that the company will soon develop other properties at Elwood that it has an interest in near by the Appleford well.

On its plant site at Signal Hill it has a well down 5700 feet near the McKeon No. 7, recently brought in at 4500 barrels daily and the Dabney-Johnson No. 52, which established a potential of more than 4300 barrels. In the same district Plymouth Oil Company's No. 10 flowed about 5300 barrels daily. It is expected that the Signal well will go 1000 feet deeper to hit this structure. Two more wells on the same site are to be started immediately by the company.

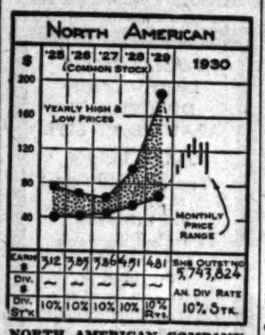
NEW PLANT BUILT

In the natural-gasoline end of the business Signal produces about 30,000 gallons daily from its Texas plant at Big Lake and about 90,000 gallons daily for its Signal Hill plant. By August 1, a new unit to the Texas plant, stepping up the capacity an additional 30,000 gallons, will be completed to cope with the increased production there. A third well recently brought in necessitates the immediate construction of another. This should bring the daily casinghead production up to 200,000 gallons daily for the Signal Hill and Texas plants combined before many months.

With the completion of the Elwood well, it is generally believed that the company will erect a plant in this district, for which contracts for the wet gas from other near-by producers will likely be negotiated.

All of its California natural-gasoline production is contracted for on a flat-price basis by the Shell Oil Company. These various contracts are on a yearly basis.

WHAT'S BEHIND YOUR STOCK



NORTH AMERICAN COMPANY

Subsidiaries controlled by North American furnish electric power, light, gas and electric railway service to four densely populated centers of electric consumption, the areas around and including Washington, D. C.; Cleveland, O.; Milwaukee and Racine, Wis., and St. Louis, Mo. Substantial but not controlling stock interests in Detroit Edison and North American Light and Power further diversify the company's investment holdings. Under a plan recently approved by the California Railroad Commission, North American Company will receive 32 per cent of the common stock of Pacific Gas and Electric in exchange for its extensive west coast properties. Wired Radio, Inc., another subsidiary, is successfully developing the hook-up of radio broadcasts by relay over electric light wires.

Net income for 1929 of $28,806,824 was more than 15 per cent above that for 1928. The upward trend of earnings was continued into 1930 with $5.06 per share earned for the year ended March 31, as against $4.81 for the twelve months ending December 31, 1929. Market value of investments is substantially in excess of cost.

Aero Patents Basis of Suit

WILMINGTON, July 19.—Charging infringement of seven patents, Curtiss Assets Corporation has filed suit in the United States District Court here against Bellanca Aircraft Corporation. These patents were assigned by various inventors to the Curtiss Aeroplane and Motors Corporation and they became later the exclusive property of the complainant.

The bill of complaint states that the plaintiff asks for an accounting of the profits said to have been gained through the alleged infringement and for preliminary and permanent injunctions.

VENTURA PROPERTIES RETIRES MORE BONDS

Retirement of $58,000 par value Ventura Properties Company first mortgage 7 per cent bonds during the six months ended June 30, last, was announced yesterday. This makes a total of $184,500, or 30 per cent, now retired of the $600,000 issue which has been outstanding since January 1, last.

FOUNDRY REPORTS

CHICAGO, July 19.—Campbell, Wyant & Cannon Foundry Company reported today consolidated net profits for six months ended June 30, last, of $583,496, or $1.68 a share on 348,000 capital shares, against $1,011,828, or $3.05 a share for the same period last year.

BROKERS ADVISE CAUTION

Summary of Views Indicates That Good Buys Can be Made on Recessions

What Spring-street brokers think of the present stock market undertone and the probable future course of prices is summarized in the following opinions:

Evidences continue to multiply as to the general improvement in business. The Western Electric shows an increase of $6,000,000 over the corresponding period last year and General Electric reports gross business in excess of the corresponding period of last year. The total consumption of electric power in the United States in the first half of this year was 1.7 per cent larger than in the corresponding period of last year and 15.1 per cent in excess of the total of the first half of 1928. American Radiator reports a substantial increase in business—over $2,000,000 of heating contracts were let during May and June. Southwestern railroads showed record gains in loadings and Gulf Coastlines with an advance of 14.5 per cent over the 1929 week made the best gain for the period. Grain loadings over the Atchison were larger than for the preceding week and the anthracite-carrying roads in the eastern region showed that coal loadings advanced 6.3 per cent over the same period of 1929. That the investing public is in the market is evidenced by the enlarged shareholders' lists. Advice again is given to purchase good dividend-paying stocks on all recessions.—J. D. Kenedy, H. J. Barneson & Co.

Despite the fact that the stock market may be called upon to absorb further selling by profit takers within the next few days, investment stocks remain in a strong technical position and should be bought on recessions, as they are still well within the buying zone.—Jno. O. Knight, Los Angeles Investment Securities Company.

There is a gradual swing of public sentiment toward a more optimistic outlook for the future. With present economic conditions in mind, it is still difficult, however, at this time to visualize an adequate basis for a sustained general upward movement in the stock market. It is likely that the trend of stock prices will be upward for a while, based on the hope that a turn for the better in business is near at hand, all the more justified in this instance because of the extended period allowed for business recuperation. Stocks have been pounded down to almost the lowest possible levels, and the better issues now show a liberal investment return. Careful selection of commitments made on recessions from now on will undoubtedly be rewarded with good principal enhancement over a reasonable period.—Wilcox Drake, Wilcox, Drake & Co.

In spite of generally improved price levels in the stock market, the current advance does not appear to us to have a healthy basis in fact. We feel that the market has not yet demonstrated the establishment of a firm foundation from which a sustained upward move could be expected. We again want to emphasize our belief that stock-market commitments at the present time should only be made after the most careful consideration, and only in securities of the best grade, with the possibility of a long-term holding to realize a profit.—Frank L. Gardner, Banks, Huntley & Co.

Whether swayed by the action of the market itself or encouraged by expectation of favorable business developments, Wall street was in much more cheerful frame of mind at the end of the week. The market remains largely professional, but with this difference: Traders who two or three weeks ago could see nothing but the selling side are now buying stocks. The public is not participating aggressively, but the uptrend appears to be clearly enough established to warrant expectation of recovery continuance.—Norman B. Courtenay, E. A. Pierce & Co.

The strong leadership that has evidenced itself in the market of late would make it appear that stocks will be a purchase on any reactions that may develop. There is widespread evidence that business is turning for the better and that the commodity situation is vastly improved. Such second-quarter statements as have made their appearance have been more favorable than expected, and where the statements have not been wholly satisfactory the individual issues have not shown a marked tendency to react. We would purchase the leading utilities, rails and oils whenever favorable opportunities present themselves.—Frank F. Hargear, Sutro & Co.

From the June 25 low, blue chip stocks have led the rally. During the past week most of the blue chip stocks have remained more or less stationary and second and third-grade issues have moved up on what has seemed to be professional operations. It seems that a position of conservatism is the wisest course to follow in the immediate future. Buying opportunities will probably appear when second-quarter earnings statements are made public and as reports of dull summer business are released.—Fred P. Schader, Dean Witter & Co.

The market advanced almost continuously during the week and has brought the recovery, as measured by the industrials, about 30 points above the low reached on June 24. However, the trading has been wholly professional; the improvement is due largely to the correction of an oversold position and has probably reached a level at which we may expect some profit-taking as well as a renewal of bear pressure. This advance, however, has served a useful purpose in helping to establish a firm market bottom and has greatly encouraged plans for constructive efforts which probably will follow upon the first evidence of business improvement.—F. H. Donnell, Jones, Hubbard & Donnell, Inc.

COTTON PLANTS IN DIXIE SMALL

Conditions Held Forecast of Early Harvest

Fruitage Unusually Full and Weevil Absent

Long Drought Over Area Still Menace to Crop

MEMPHIS (Tenn.) July 19.—The cotton weed of the central belt will be smaller than usual and prospects are that harvest may be as early as last year, if not earlier, but the hot weather and prolonged drought have not yet seriously reduced the yield. On the other hand, the heat, aided by absence of weevil, has enabled the plants to fruit better than in many years, according to reports from many sections of the territory.

However small the plants may be they will be so full of bolls that the deterioration so far in weed has largely been offset. However, another week or two of drought, which now has gone past sixty days, will curtail the crop 25 per cent or more, as it is now at the most critical stage. Early corn crop, hay, gardens and pastures have been burned completely up. Cotton, suffering much less for want of water, is beginning to need it now to a marked extent.

FEED CROPS HIT

The loss of food and feed crops will be a serious blow to farmers and probably will be reflected in next year's cotton acreage in the central belt. In a few sections the upland cotton, planted late, has been suffering severely from the heat and drought. The crop in this belt is spotted as to size of plant, but the cleanest in years.

Weevil damage in Mississippi has been materially checked, says the State Plant Board

A general low infestation prevails over the central and southern countries, but the extreme heat practically stopped damage, the board says.

Weevils did not become generally distributed in the delta and northern counties of Mississippi. Red spider injury, promoted by the hot weather, is reported in several delta counties, where cotton is beginning to suffer acutely from lack of rain.

DAMAGE REPORTED

From Greenville, Washington county, Mississippi, comes direct word that the smaller cotton is damaged, while larger stalks are withstanding the drought fairly well. No rain has been felt there since May 18, last. Following the heavy rains of early May, 15,000 acres of cotton there were replanted, which is now suffering.

Following are parts of a dispatch from Clarendon, Monroe county, Arkansas, dated the 17th inst.:

"Today marked the sixty-first day of drought in Eastern Arkansas, during which corn and feed crops have deteriorated 60 to 75 per cent and cotton 20 to 30 per cent. Cotton has started putting on blooms at the top before the stalks are eighteen inches tall, which is the smallest plants ever seen. White River has fallen to a depth of 8.2 feet, a new low mark since 1925."

HUGE TAX BURDEN ITEMIZED

Of $9,000,000,000 Levy for 1930 About 75 Per Cent State and Municipal, Balance Federal

BY JOHN F. SINCLAIR

[Copyright, 1930, by the North American Newspaper Alliance]

NEW YORK, July 19. (Exclusive)—Of the $9,000,000,000 of taxes levied this year in the United States, about 75 per cent of it is asked by the State and local governments and one-fourth by the Federal government.

This is three times as much as was raised in 1913. But every year since, the total taxes levied have risen from $400,000,000 to $600,000,000.

So when the Bureau of Railway Economics announced that 54,000 miles of railways employing 372,000 people, that 13,300 locomotives, 531,000 freight train cars, and 12,000 passenger train cars were needed just to produce enough net earnings to pay taxes, it brought the problem of the constantly increasing taxes to the front.

Today one-fourth of the total net income of railroads goes into taxes —other industries show much the same percentage.

When conditions are prosperous and everybody is making money, tax bills in the United States have been paid cheerfully, but in a period of failing commodity prices and heavy unemployment, it becomes a much more serious one.

That is the situation today.

Brokers' loans are getting back into the control of the banks again, after their wild excursion into "green pastures." "Bootleg" loans—those contracted outside of banks—are little talked about now, because they are getting smaller every week.

The shift, which has taken place from the nonbanking lenders to banks, is considered a generally "stabilising influence upon the country's credit facilities," according to Dominick & Dominick, well-known bankers.

Brokers' loans still, however, are above the levels of last January, and security loans are also higher . . . probably attributed to the withdrawal of nonbanking funds.

Banks are, if anything, discouraging loans on securities. Their immediate job is to take on the brokers' loans, let loose by the nonbanking lenders who withdraw from the loaning market.

The value of listed stocks increased almost $6,300,000,000 to May 1, this year, while new listings added another $3,000,000,000. Brokers' loans during this period rose but $650,000,000 and security loans around $350,000,000.

The huge brokers' loan drop of $1,020,000,000 during the month of June brought the total brokers' loan down to $3,721,000,000, the lowest level reached since August, 1917.

The New York banking situation, while complicated somewhat because of the need for taking up the brokers' loans, formerly carried by outside banks and private corporations, is in excellent shape, judging by the June 30 call reports.

Another well-known writer on business conditions, Theodore M. Knappen, in the Magazine of Wall Street, suggests that the third and fourth-quarter reports of corporations' net earnings will be disappointing and will tend to offset in the public mind the certain consequences of the resumption of business activity.

He says: "The writer is inclined to think that August will witness the cessation of the business retreat, but that the upturn will not be undeniably in evidence until after the first of the year."

Quoting the committee on economic changes to the effect that while a technique of balance for the control of the business cycle may in time be worked out, he adds it "might, if attained, tend to impede progress."

Then, says Mr. Knappen: "Mankind still may require the alluring hazards of uncertainty and the sting of defeat from time to time to make it put forth its best efforts."

Foreign Trade in June Drops to 1924 Level

WASHINGTON, July 19. (AP)—International trade of the United States during June declined to the lowest monthly level the country has experienced in the last six years.

Exports of American goods amounted to $299,000,000, as the Commerce Department estimated them today, which was a figure less than that of any month since July, 1924, when the country's exports amounted to $276,680,000.

Imports for last month were $250,000,000, which is lower than those recorded since January, 1922, when they amounted to $217,000,000. Imports and exports for June were each approximately $100,000,000 below those for the same month last year.

Gold imports for June amounted to $13,938,000, offset by exports of $26,000,000, leaving the net gain to the country for the month, $13,912,000. The total net gain of gold for the first six months of 1930 was fixed by the report at $222,536,000. Silver exports for June, registered during a month when prices of that metal were the lowest recorded in modern history, amounted to $3,336,000, as compared with imports of $3,707,000.

Steel Company Reports Gain in Foreign Trade

Foreign shipments of oil storage equipment manufactured locally by Consolidated Steel Corporation are beginning to assume an important place in the company's business since it absorbed the Gallagher Company a year ago.

Since the first of the year, exports of this equipment, all Gallagher pontoon decks for oil storage reservoirs, have been made to Australia, Ireland, East Africa and Natal. The latest foreign order, received by the steel corporation last week, calls for early shipment of three of the decks to the port of Beyruth, Syria, Asiatic Turkey, and two at Mayaguez, Porto Rico.

These decks, which float on and blanket the oil against fire and evaporation, are manufactured under exclusive patent rights acquired by Consolidated Steel at the time of the Gallagher purchase.

United Founders Tells Holdings

World-wide holdings of the United Founders Corporation and its subsidiaries, including American Founders Corporation, are disclosed for the first time in the report of the corporation just made public. The consolidated portfolio as of May 31, last, shows holdings in 945 different securities, of which 498 are bonds and 447 are stocks.

Of these holdings 67 per cent are in American securities, 6 per cent in the British Commonwealth of Nations, 2 per cent in Central and South America, 17 per cent in Continental Europe and slightly more than 1 per cent in Japan and Asiatic countries. The remainder is in cash. The foreign holdings include 356 bonds and 203 stocks, while domestic holdings include 142 bonds and 244 stocks.

STEEL CARTEL OF EUROPE DISRUPTED

PARIS, July 19.—A definite split in the European steel cartel is revealed as a result of the decision at Liege the 15th inst. to abandon quotas as well as minimum prices on bars, hoops and sheets. Competition is now unlimited in these productions. Opposition to the cartel is led by the Belgian concern of Calbeco. The question of prices of semifinished products and beams will be discussed at the meeting next week.

RUBBER MARKET

NEW YORK, July 19. (Exclusive)—Some new lows were made on the rubber exchange today with trading quiet. The market at London was barely steady and coupled with restriction schemes that seemed to have distracted short selling from the market No. 1 standard closed unchanged to 7 points decline.

PROFIT TAKING HALTS UPTU

Advance of Past Four Receives Setback

Bulls Fail to Further Advantage Gained

Short Interests Believed Well Covered

NEW YORK, July 19. (AP)—The bulls agreed today that there was valor's better part in profits in stocks after a run of almost steadily rising prices.

For the first time in several weeks, however, there was no crowding. Its absence suggested that the interest had been well absorbed and the market was recovering from a 4 per cent of the ground lost in the April-June decline, and that operations on the long side may expect little support from the covering at this time.

Today's decline virtually wiped out yesterday's loss. Moreover, the averages it amounted to 1½ points in many popular issues which made the drive of 2 to 6 points in many popular issues which made the drive of 2 to 6 points in many popular issues which made the drive of 2 to 6

PROFIT TAKING HALTS UPTURN

Advance of Past Fortnight Receives Setback

Bulls Fail to Further Press Advantage Gained

Short Interests Believed to Be Well Covered

NEW YORK, July 19. (AP)—The bulls agreed today that discovery was valor's better part and took profits in stocks after a fortnight of almost steadily rising prices.

For the first time in several days, however, there was no closing rally. Its absence suggested the short interest had been well eliminated and the market was recovering about 50 per cent of the ground lost in the April-June decline, and that further operations on the long side should expect little support from those covering at this time.

Today's decline virtually equaled yesterday's loss. Measured by the averages it amounted to 1¾ points, which made the drops of 3 and 4 points in many popular shares rather deceptive. Just as some of the recent strength in pool favorites had been rather misleading when viewed in the broader light of the general market's performance. A few scattered shares, including United States Industrial Alcohol, General Electric, General Motors and Radio held up well, but in American Telephone, American Can, Anaconda, Byers, Johns-Manville, Procter & Gamble, Vanadium, and Westinghouse the losses ranged from 1 to 3 points. Allied Chemical dropped 6, J. I. Case 5 3-4 and National Cash Register 4 5-8. There was little mutual strength in United Corporation, United States Industrial Alcohol and International Silver.

Stock traders who have been active on the up side found little that was favorable in the news, and there was some disposition to make a test of the market's actual position, that is, whether the rally has been based solely on professional operations or whether it has represented a discounting of future recovery in business. A reaction at this time, it was pointed out, should clarify the situation.

There is a growing belief in commission-house circles that July will see the bottom of the business depression, particularly in the heavy steel industry.

Foreign exchanges were firm. Sterling cables rose 5-16 and most leading European rates showed steward.

LOS ANGELES EXCHANGE

Stock Prices Ease Fractionally as Trading Operations Fall to Listless Levels

While half a dozen of the more active issues on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange turned fractionally lower yesterday, the volume of trading was of such negligible amounts that no definite trend of prices in either direction was indicated. On the other hand the small recessions coupled with the light turnover demonstrated the ability of the market to maintain a firm position at a time when sentiment is somewhat uneasy.

Here and there a stock showed individual strength. Driver Harris sold up 3 points on announcement it had been licensed to use the Krupp-Nitrona patents. A little bullish activity appeared in Pilot Radio, which rose 1 point to 6½, perhaps based on rumors of a more favorable patent licensing arrangement. Duval Texas Sulphur, Miles-Bement-Pond and Giles & Co. moved up more than 1 point each.

The holding and investing company groups generally sagged. United Founders declined to a new low at 16¾ in active selling, and closed at 17¼, off a fraction. Transamerica and Goldman Sachs each lost about 1 points, then rebounded a point from the bottom.

The Cities Service group, strong features yesterday, yielded part of their gains in realizing sales. Cities Service slipped back below 20, closing at 20¼, off 1/4. Indian Territory "A" lost a point of yesterday's 2-point rise, but the Class B stock was firm.

Oils generally were sluggish. Gulf and Richfield lost a point each, Pan Am-Western utilities, Eastern Gas and Fuel Bond and Share closed at 24, off ½, and American Gas and Electric lost ¾.

Among the industrials and specialties, Anaconda-Calumet lost 3 and Deere 4 points. Curtiss Aviation, Wright New York, Rio and Buenos Aires augered 1¼.

The closing price is omitted when same as the bid and both bid and close when same as the high.

LOSS REPORTED

NEW YORK, July 19.—Dome Mines, Ltd., reported today net loss before depletion and depreciation of $40,764 for the June quarter, against net profits of $655,485 a year ago. The company earned $48,923 for the six months.

NEW YORK CURB STOCKS

NEW YORK, July 19. (AP)—Curb shares reacted moderately in week-end profit-taking today. Selling was in light volume, and most losses were limited to a point or less, but a few shares dropped 2 to 4. Sales for the two-hour session were only 362,370 shares.

Here and there a stock showed individual strength. Driver Harris sold up 3 points on announcement it had been licensed to use the Krupp-Nitrona patents. A little bullish activity appeared in Pilot Radio, which rose 1 point to 6½, perhaps based on rumors of a more favorable patent licensing arrangement. Duval Texas Sulphur, Miles-Bement-Pond and Giles & Co. moved up more than 1 point each.

The holding and investing company groups generally sagged. United Founders declined to a new low at 16¾ in active selling, and closed at 17¼, off a fraction. Transamerica and Goldman Sachs each lost about 1 points, then rebounded a point from the bottom.

The Cities Service group, strong features yesterday, yielded part of their gains in realizing sales. Cities Service slipped back below 20, closing at 20¼, off 1/4. Indian Territory "A" lost a point of yesterday's 2-point rise, but the Class B stock was firm.

Oils generally were sluggish. Gulf and Richfield lost a point each, Pan American-Western utilities, Eastern Gas and Fuel Bond and Share closed at 24, off ½, and American Gas and Electric lost ¾.

Among the industrials and specialties, Anaconda-Calumet lost 3 and Deere 4 points. Curtiss Aviation, Wright New York, Rio and Buenos Aires augered 1¼.

The closing price is omitted when same as the bid and both bid and close when same as the high.

Sharp Rally in Corn Futures Marks Trading

CHICAGO, July 19. (AP)—It was a runaway market today in the corn trade, with a tumultuous rush of buying, and prices showing a decided tendency to soar. The climax came when the weekly official weather forecast was issued, shutting off hopes which previously were held for a material break-up of excessive heat and drought. A maximum jump of nearly 4c a bushel over yesterday's finish on corn resulted, with wheat values strongly sympathizing.

Closing quotations on corn were buoyed at ¾@2¾c a bushel net advance, and more than 7c up from this week's bottom figures. Wheat closed unsettled, ½@¾c over yesterday's finish, oats showing ½@1¼c gain, and provisions unchanged to 17c rise.

Severe damage already to corn was reported from various portions. Kansas advices telling of terrible winds that were decidedly if not literally burning up the corn fields. Hardy speculators, nevertheless, indulged in considerable profit taking after the day's opening bulge in prices, and nothing in the way of reaction followed. The main buying appeared directly in parts of the Northwest and West. Details pointing to, however, describe the ill-effects at least, and drouths over the corn belt was a whole, must the market quickly go again, with the weekly forecast later printing about a bigger stampede.

From start to finish trading in the corn market proved of large volume, with widespread prevailing excessive heat and drought being an incentive to general buying. Besides, numerous stop-loss orders to purchase were forced into operation from previous speculative sellers who found themselves on a disagreeable side in the rapid upturn of values. December delivery of corn, representing the new crop, displayed the greatest strength.

Aside from the stimulating influence of the forward drift of temperatures, a chief feature in the wheat market was the export business and persistent unfavorable news from spring wheat territory both north and south of the Canadian border, with crop news adverse also from Europe. France and Germany. It was estimated 7,000,000 bushels of wheat were bought today for trans-Atlantic shipment, and that at least 1,000,000 bushels more have been taken altogether the present week. Figures were given here that Germany's wheat crop will be short 5,000,000 bushels, while in Saskatchewan and Southern Alberta have been continuously dry weather, with much surface and subsoil this season, and reports were made that 40 per cent of Saskatchewan wheat acreage will not be seed back. Oats prices followed the action of wheat and corn.

Provisions were likewise responsive to upturns in cereals.

CATTLE—Greatly increased receipts of cattle, combined with the hot weather created a very slow demand for dressed products, were the factors in the price downturns the past week. There continues to be a wide spread between the eastern fed cattle selling here and the best native grass stock and with the demand for better beef this condition is expected to be permanent. Compared with a week ago steers are 25@50c lower, with the most declines on the in-between and lower grades. She stock ruled steady to 25c lower. Low grades of ally killing classes were hard to move and some sales show more than the above declines. TEACHERS MUST LIVE IN STATE

Attorney General Rules California Instructors Must Be Residents

SACRAMENTO, July 19. (AP)—California school-teachers must live in California while they are teaching, Atty.-Gen. U. S. Webb has ruled.

This opinion was voiced in a recent letter to Elmer W. Heald, District Attorney of Imperial county, who presented a case in which a teacher employed in the Winterhaven school, Imperial county, lived in Yuma, Ariz., one and one-half miles away.

Trustees of the school district passed a resolution September 9, 1929, requiring teachers to live in California, Heald said. Mrs. Clara B. Snell continued to live in Yuma, driving to her work as teacher in the Winterhaven school each day.

Webb ruled persistent refusal to obey the order of the trustees would be grounds for dismissal of a teacher.

Radio Guides Air Line Over Lofty Peaks

MEXICO CITY, July 19. (AP)—High on a 10,000-foot mountain peak, miles from civilization, an American radio operator guards the airplane route from Mexico City over the mountains to the east coast.

From his perch the watcher, Frank Hagerty of New York, notes weather conditions over the mountains and radios whether the Mexican Aviation Company's planes may safely cross the peaks, or should detour or stay on the ground. The safety of twenty or more passengers daily is dependent on his observations.

Though located in the tropics, Haggerty's mountain station is so high that the winds striking his shelter always are chilly.

Bishops From America Put to Linguistic Test

VATICAN CITY, July 19. (AP)—Refusal of Pope Pius XI to permit interpreters at the quincennial audiences with his bishops has put the linguistic talents of many American prelates to the test.

The Pope's English is not adequate for a complete audience and he makes exceptions to his rule only in unusual cases, such as bishops from the Far East. One visiting American, whose Latin was rather rusty, summoned up the German he had learned in his youth and carried on in that tongue.

European bishops do not have the same difficulty for the head of the church speaks fluent German, French and Spanish in addition to his native Italian.

Gossip-Stone Puts Curb on Idle Talkers

MULHOUSE (France) July 19. (AP)—The famous "gossip-stone" still warns idle talkers as they pass the ancient, frescoed City Hall.

This stone, a mask that weighs twenty-five pounds, is in the Historical Museum, but a duplicate hangs on the end of the City Hall, with a warning inscription. Its significance is evident from the big tongue hanging out.

Centuries ago gossips were punished by being compelled to walk the streets wearing the heavy stone mask. Its use is recorded as far back as 1551 and as late as 1781.

Carquinez Rail Bridge to Open by Thanksgiving

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19. (Exclusive)—Opening of the new $12,000,000 Southern Pacific bridge across Carquinez Straits, eliminating ferry transfer for trains to and from the north and east, on Thanksgiving Day is anticipated by engineers with the placing of the central lift span, hardest part of the task. The huge central span can be lifted to a height of 135 feet above water in ninety seconds. Steamers now using the straits en route to the Sacramento or San Joaquin rivers must signal to pass.

STOCKTON BUILDING GAINS

STOCKTON, July 19. (AP)—Building permits issued for Stockton structures were nearly 40 per cent greater in representative value during the first six months of 1930 than for the corresponding period in 1929, city officials reported. Permits totaling $897,967 were issued up to the 1st inst., as against $645,819 during the first half of last year.

El Radio Indica a los Aviones su Ruta por la Elevada Serranía

CIUDAD DE MEJICO, Julio 19.—En la cumbre de una montaña de 10,000 pies de altura, y a muchas millas de la civilización, un radiotelegrafista yanqui vigila la derrota de los aviones que van de la ciudad de Méjico, cruzando la sierra, hacia la costa oriental del país.

Desde su alto mirador, el vigilante, Frank Haggerty de Nueva York, observa las condiciones atmosféricas que privan en las montañas, y radiotelegrafia si los aviones de la Compañía Mejicana de Aviación pueden emprender con seguridad el vuelo sobre los altos picos, o deben buscar algún rodeo conveniente, o quedarse en tierra. De sus observaciones depend la seguridad de los veinte o más viajaros que llevan diaramente esos aeroplanos.

No obstante hallarse en los trópicos, la atalaya de Haggerty está tan alta, que los vientos que azotan su abrigo están siempre helados.

Pacifista Lesionado por Querer Separar a dos Rijosos

CIUDAD DE MEJICO, Julio 19.—Por intentar atajar la pelea de dos mujeres en una cantina, resultó herido Jesús Torres Portales, de la ciudad de Méjico.

Intervino Torres Portales en la riña, porque temía saliera lastimado su hijito que estaba en brazos de su esposa, una de las combatientes. Tres espectadores que, al parecer, se estaban divirtiendo en grande con la pendencia, se echaron sobre Torres Portales, y uno de ellos lo apuñaló; en la espalda.

Esta de Venta un Añoso Palacio Europeo

MONTSERRAT, (Portugal) Julio 19.—El fuerte costo de su conservación y las crecidas contribuciones son motivo de que se haya puesto a la venta el Palacio de Montserrat, majestuosa mansión que se levanta en el punto más occidental de Europa.

Ofrece incomparable vista del océano Atlantico, y ha estado durante varias generaciones en poder de la familia Cook. Lo construyó James Knowles para Sir Francis Cook, primer vizconde de Montserrat; pero el actual castellano, Sir Herbert, apodado el "Principe Comerciante," se presenta sólo de tarde en tarde y por breves momentos, en el castillo, pues sus negocios lo detienen en Inglaterra.

Pertenece al palacio, y se halla no lejos de él, el Convento de Corcho, así llamado porque en lo interior se halla literalmente forrado de planchas de corcho. El convento se halla en parte en una excavación practicada en la roca, y se destinaba a lugar de castigo para los monjes recalcitrantes del monasterio de Pena.

En una grieta de la roca que hay en el jardín, San Honorio pasó, según se afirma, quince años de su vida, tratando, según dijo Byron, de "merecer el cielo haciendo un infierno de la tierra."

Dientes de Santos como Reliquias de una Iglesia de Viena

VIENA, Julio 19.—El ropón bautismal del difunto emperador Francisco José es una de las curiosidades de la exposición de tesoros de iglesia del palacio imperial.

El mismo ropón sirvio para el bautismo de su hermano Maximiliano, emperador de Méjico, y para sus demás hermanos y hermanas.

Se dice que es la más sorprendente y valiosa colección de reliquias eclesiásticas que hay en el mundo, y se la ha guardado hasta aquí bajo llave en la Iglesia Capuchina del palacio.

Entre las muchas famosas reliquias que allí se exhiben figuran una espina de la corona de Jesús y muchos dientes y muelas de San Pedro, Santa Isabel, San José y San Cristóbal.

Prosperan los Cultos de la Naturaleza en la Riviera Francesa

SAINT MAXIME (Francia) Julio 19.—Con la llegada del verano, el culto al desnudo se ha propagado como los hongos por todo el sur de Francia. Tres grupos de fieles han podido observarse entre Tolón y la frontera italiana.

Hace varios años, la policía tuvo que proceder contra una colonia que se había establecido sobre una montaña detrás de Cannes. Fue duramente multado el doctor alemán que encabezada esa colonia de desnudos, y a sus fieles les dieron quince días para que se fueran de Francia. Se marcharon rumbo a Haití, donde les aseguraron que los inviernos eran menos rigurosos.

Las nuevas colonias están viviendo tras de altas tapias, que rodean grandes propiedades, y dos de ellas tienen playas privadas.

El baño sin ropa es una diversión nocturna común a lo largo de la Riviera. Una noche de luna fue sorprendido un grupo de gente en cueros por tres hombres y los intrusos no se retiraron sin haber cobrado de los bañistas cien francos de multa.

SHULER RADIO INQUIRY URGED

Nix Seeks Investigation by Federal Authorities

Law College Dean Demands Showdown by Mayor

He Declares 'Puppet' Charge to be Grave Issue

When Mayor Porter said he had quit in the controversy over the resignation of City Prosecutor Nix, who declares he is ousted because he displeases Rev. R. P. Shuler, he meant it, he reiterated yesterday, but Nix continued peppering away, with a considerable number of citizens joining in.

Monday night, Nix, in a radio address, called attention to the fact that Frank D. Keaton, when he killed Motley H. Flint, had one of Shuler's pamphlets in his pocket. Tuesday night Shuler replied. Wednesday night Porter demanded Nix's resignation. Thursday Mayor Porter termed "a deliberate lie" the accusation that Shuler dominates his administration and forced the Nix resignation. Friday Mayor Porter announced his withdrawal from the argument.

WANTS CHARGE SETTLED

E. A. Kline, dean of the Pacific Coast University College of Law yesterday sent Mayor Porter a letter in which he deplored the controversy and particularly the lack of dignity upon the part of the Mayor in "giving the lie."

"A serious charge has been made by Nix with reference to the fact you are practically a 'puppet Mayor,'" wrote Dean Kline, "and that you are controlled by hidden or unseen persons. I consider the charge of such grave importance that it is absolutely up to you to disprove the same and up to Mr. Nix to prove it. The people are interested to know who is the Mayor."

Dean Kline suggested the appointment of a committee to go over the ground and decide the situation by majority vote.

Mayor Porter had no comment to make.

In a statement issued yesterday, Nix suggests that the Shuler case, and his use of the radio, be laid before the Federal Radio Commission. He said that Mayor Porter removed a remote-control panel from his office and installed it in the Mayor's office, where it is now housed in one of the rooms of the Mayor's suite.

Nix also states that he has sent his wife and children to a safe place because of the threatening letters he has received from persons signing themselves "Shulerites."

NIX'S STATEMENT

The statement is as follows:

"The Federal Radio Commission, in the person of one of its Washington commissioners, is holding a hearing in this city.

"I don't know how, exactly, the law interprets sedition. But I know wobblies were driven out of San Pedro who said less in their speeches than the Rev. Bob Shuler uttered in his radio talk last Tuesday night. And recently, up north, the commission closed a station because its proprietor, during a po-

City Hall Stolen and No One Particularly Surprised

Theft of Los Angeles' City Hall was disclosed yesterday.

It was a miniature, faithful in outward physical detail, occupying a place in the cyclorama on the Main-street level of the hall itself. Its disappearance was noted by Ben Olin, service agent of the department of water and power.

A new replica will have to be built for the cyclorama, which is a display of the Owens Valley, source of the city's water and power supplies.

GAIN SHOWN IN TAXABLE INTANGIBLES

Total Already Announced as $1,034,375,415 With New Law Given Credit

Notwithstanding the market depression of last fall, the declaration of securities and credits for assessment in Los Angeles county for 1930 will greatly exceed the returns for last year, County Assessor Hopkins announced yesterday.

The total of stocks, bonds, notes and solvent credits already declared is $1,034,375,415, and this, Mr. Hopkins added, will be materially increased by additional assessments on securities discovered through probate records and other sources.

"This is a vindication of the judgment of those responsible for the adoption of the constitutional amendment providing for the low tax rate on intangibles," said Mr. Hopkins. "It upholds the argument that a low tax rate would bring forth such a large volume of securities from concealment as to reduce materially the burden of taxation on real estate.

"Holders of securities are generally willing to pay a reasonable tax on their holdings. This has been the experience, too, in other States where such reasonable tax is imposed. In California it is now shown that not only is this condition acceptable to those residing here, but is also the means of attracting substantial citizens of other States who wanted to come to California, but were afraid to do so on account of our tax laws.

"The successful results now being shown were made possible through newspaper publicity and the active co-operation of the banks, investment bankers and stock brokers in advising their customers to comply with the law."

In proof of the assertion the new low rate tax law is attracting residents to California and particularly Southern California, Mr. Hopkins stated that among the new

BEING just naturally trustful, I believe everything I read in the newspapers. I would believe it if they told us that water is dry or that we have been having cold polar weather hereabouts.

But, once in awhile, there appears in one of the papers a statement so outrageously impossible that I rebel. One such appeared yesterday; and I hope that the outraged subscribers of the paper rise to rebuke it with stern punishment. The statement to which I refer was as follows:

"Rev. Shuler refused to say anything and maintained silence."

There are some things that just couldn't happen.

EVERYBODY'S WRONG

While Senator Hiram Johnson (why do I think of him when noise is the topic?) . . . while Hiram is raving against the naval treaty in the United States Senate, stating that we have surrendered our future to the demon British, Admiral Jellicoe and Admiral Beatty rave against the naval treaty before the British Parliament, stating that England has surrendered its future to the demon Americans.

ABDUL, THE TERRIBLE

One of the beneficiaries of Motley Flint's will is our old friend, Abdul the Turk, who has swabbed down the back bones of more prominent men than any other trainer alive.

A secret chapter of our nation's history is that Abdul was once the middleweight champion prize fighter of the world and was swindled out of that glory.

Abdul was a comic prize fighter and he was the only one who didn't realize the comic part. Abdul would leap out of his corner with a wild light in his eyes and both his arms and most of his feet describing frantic windmill circles. One night, just to promote a little gayety, they put him in the ring with Philadelphia Jack O'Brien, world champ and very clever and fancy.

Like the rest of the crowd, the fastidious Mister O'Brien screamed with laughter. In the middle of a scream the lights went out and the little birds be-

LOS ANGELES GOAL OF TOURISTS' DREAMS

Unheralded Flood of Travelers Booking Passage Here Surpasses "Times" Forecast of Last Spring, Held Too Sanguine Then

Travel agency for the promotion of tourist travel to this part of the country shows that Los Angeles is [illegible] over the mecca for the great American traveling public that is intent on seeing America first [illegible].

Tourists are coming by land, sea and air in numbers validating the estimate published exclusively in The Times early last spring that approximately 1,296,000 tourists will come to Southern California this year and that more than $20,000 of them with an aggregate expenditure exceeding $204,010,000 will have their headquarters in Los Angeles. More than 50,000 are expected to locate here permanently.

"In line with the plans of the All-Year Club," Mr. McGinnis announced, "we are seeking new ways of attracting a new class of tourist—the people whose annual vacations are limited to two or three weeks. The total tourist travel expenditures of this large class are potentially very great and, cultivated to their fullest extent, can add millions of dollars annually to California's tourist profits."

Trying out its new low-rate special excursion round-trip rate from San Francisco, the Espee on the first day brought more than 2000 excursionists here in addition to the average number of travelers. In a recent two weeks' period, more than 4200 such excursionists were brought via the Espee from Louisiana, Texas and Arizona.

That travel to California from eastern points "is as good as, or better than, in 1928" is the statement of James B. Duffy, assistant passenger traffic manager for the Santa Fe, which road also has instituted special excursion rates to this State with good results.

The Union Pacific, which likewise is obtaining encouraging results from its summer excursion

CITY WILL CELEBRATE BIRTHDAY

Colorful Fiesta Planned for September to Mark 149th Anniversary

Los Angeles' 149th birthday anniversary is to be celebrated with a spectacular two-day fiesta to be conducted by the Plaza de Los Angeles with the collaboration of leading civic organizations, according to announcement yesterday by Mrs. Christine Sterling, chairman of the general committee.

The plans for the celebration, to center at the Plaza on September 4 and 5, are sponsored by Mayor Porter, the Board of Supervisors, the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and the Downtown Business Men's Association, according to Mrs. Sterling.

Civic interest in the affair is indicated by the fact that James R. Martin, who was awarded a medal as Los Angeles' most useful citizen, has accepted the chairmanship of the finance committee for the mammoth municipal birthday party. The fiesta is to be financed by private donation and will be entirely free to the public.

Including parades, street dancing and other festivities an elaborate program of events is being arranged and Phil Whiting, famed as the director of the Ramona Pageant at Hemet, has been commissioned to stage the affair with the assistance of Arthur Belasco as business manager.

Los Angeles was founded on September 4, 1871, at the Plaza and the plan is to bring back the color and Spanish-American atmosphere of that day on an elaborate scale for the birthday party, according to Mrs. Sterling.

D'ORR MAY DEFEND KEATON

Lawyer Who Appeared for Shuler in Libel Cases Sought by Slayer of Flint

Attorney Paul Barksdale D'Orr, who defended Rev. R. P. Shuler in two criminal libel actions, may represent Frank D. Keaton, slayer of Motley Flint, when Keaton goes to trial on August 1 in Superior Judge Schauer's court, it was learned yesterday.

Negotiations to retain D'Orr have been commenced by Mrs. Miriam Keaton, wife of the slayer, the attorney admitted yesterday, when he was questioned on the subject.

"Mrs. Keaton, in company with several other persons, called on me in my office Friday and discussed my taking over the defense of Keaton," said D'Orr yesterday. "As yet, no conclusion in the matter has been reached, however, and I have heard nothing more from them."

More than usual interest in D'Orr's possible appearance in the case was manifest, however, because of the controversy that has developed over one of Shuler's political pamphlets, "Julian Thieves," a copy of which the police said they found in Keaton's pocket soon after the murder. The Methodist minister has since been quoted as saying that the booklet was "planted" by his enemies. The pamphlet, however, remains held with the other evidence in the case.

D'Orr declared that he did not recall the names of the persons that accompanied Mrs. Keaton, but that they were not representatives of the broadcasting pastor. He said:

"Mr. Shuler has not communicated with me in the Keaton case and I have not talked to him."

FINANCE CONTROLS

Shuler's former lawyer said that his entry in the case hinged, apparently, upon a matter of finances, and that he believes that Mrs. Keaton and her friends are probably trying to adjust the matter.

"Keaton's financial affairs are apparently in bad shape and what little money he has left his wife needs to support herself and her two small children," said D'Orr. "I told her I could not accept any of the small funds she has, but at the same time I am so busy that I felt I could not devote the time necessary to prepare the case without some compensation."

D'Orr successfully defended Shuler in two criminal libel actions in the Municipal courts here. One was brought by the Knights of Columbus and the other by former Mayor Cryer.

ALIENIST OBSERVES

While Mrs. Keaton was negotiating for D'Orr's services, Public Defender Vernon and Deputy Public Defender Neeley, who have been representing the slayer, continued their efforts in his behalf. At their instigation, Keaton was examined in the psycopathic ward of the General Hospital yesterday for symptoms of insanity by Dr. Charles Allen, one of three psychiatrists appointed by Superior Judge McComb to render a report on Keaton's mental condition. Dr. Allen made only a preliminary examination and expressed no opinion after the examination was completed.

Today or tomorrow Drs. Edwin Waite and Edson Steele will also examine the accused man, and the examinations will be continued, it was stated, during all of this week. Results of these mental tests, fol-

AUTOS INCREASE IN CITY CENTER

Traffic Survey Numbers 166,959 Daily

Compares With 127,651 in 1924 Tabulation

Brief Parking Fails to Ease Congestion

Despite increased restrictions against parking in the Central Traffic District since 1924, a comparative study contained in a report on a parking survey made for the Los Angeles Traffic Association shows that the number of automobiles entering the district in an eight-hour business day this year was 166,959, while in 1924 it was only 121,651.

The report, which was made public yesterday, was drawn up by Walter R. Lindersmith, executive secretary of the association, who conducted the survey with the aid of Richard Sachse, an engineer, who is a member of the executive committee of the association. It is along the same lines as a similar report which was made for the association in 1924.

The 1924 report argued strongly for the contention that parking restriction would not cause a discontinuance of the use of automobiles in the congested district. It argued, further, that limitation of the amount of time a vehicle is permitted to remain in a parking space is a poor remedy for congestion, for, it said, vehicles moving frequently in and out of parking spaces cause more congestion than vehicles remaining undisturbed in one place.

NO SOLUTION ATTEMPTED

When the point has been reached where the entire street area between curbs is required for moving traffic, it recommended that the proper remedy was to prohibit parking altogether during the hours when the congestion exists. It pointed out where and at what times such prohibition was necessary and most of its recommendations have since been adopted. In addition, there has also been a great increase since 1914 in the red-curb area.

The report just made public calls attention to all these facts and adduces the increase in automobile traffic in the district as proof of correctness of the conclusions of the 1924 report. However, it attempts no final solution of the parking problem and makes no further recommendations.

It treats of the matter only from the standpoint of traffic congestion, but admits that there is another side to the problem, in the statement that "business establishments know that lack of parking facilities may keep customers away, that old buying habits may be dislocated or valuable patronage diverted." It is also shown that the increase in automobiles entering the congested district is by no means as great in proportion as the increase in automobiles in the city since 1924.

SPACE MEASUREMENT

The Central Traffic District covered by the report just made is the area bounded by Sunset Boulevard, Los Angeles street, Twelfth street and Figueroa street, excluding the Bunker Hill district within the boundaries of Sunset, Fifth, Figueroa and Hill streets. The total length of the curb space in this district is 146,596 feet.

Available for forty-five-minute parking, except between 4:30 and 6 p.m., are 73,008 feet, the other 73,510 feet being devoted to red, yellow and white paint zones, curb openings, crosswalks, alleys and fire plugs. Using eighteen feet as basis for the required parking space per car, it is computed that 4060 cars could be parked at one time.

If the forty-five-minute rule were strictly enforced this would mean that 35,187 cars could be parked in the district in the six and one-half hours in which parking is permitted of the eight hours during which the count was made, which fixed the number of cars entering the district as 166,959. That means, the report points out, that the maximum percentage of cars which could find parking space along the curb is only 21 per cent of the total.

DIRECTION OF ENTRY

No direct comparison of the space free for parking in the present Central Traffic District as against any preceding year is available, but one is available for the district bounded by First and Ninth and Figueroa and Los Angeles streets. In a survey of this area made in 1927, the curb space free for parking was found to be 63,044 feet and the restricted curb space was 45,308 feet. In the same area this year the curb parking space had shrunk to 52,442 feet and restricted space had increased to 58,947 feet, an increase of 11,639 feet in restricted curb space. A comparison with 1924, if one were available, would undoubtedly show even a greater increase in restricted space.

Some interesting statistical facts unconnected with the problem under discussion are revealed incidentally in the report. There is one table, for instance, which gives an indication of the direction in which the city is making its greatest growth by tabulating the directions from which the automobiles enter the downtown district.

It shows that most of the automobiles enter from the west. More strikingly it shows that the increase this year of cars entering from that direction over the number in 1924 is 32 per cent. The increase of cars entering from the north is 25.2 per cent, from the east 20.4 per cent and from the south 13.3 per cent.

lowing the usual custom, probably will not be be made known until the physicians testify at the trial.

While plans for Keaton's defense materialized, however, plans for the prosecution on a murder charge also went forward under the guiding hands of Dep. Dist.-Attys. Burgess and Russell, co-operating with the police.

Burgess announced that the following persons, many of them eye-witnesses to the shooting in Superior Judge Collier's court last Monday morning, will be called for questioning this week: Judge Collier, W. R. Fisher, P. A. Chaillie, W. A. Bowen, C. J. Harrison, Myron Selsnick, Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Selsnick, G. H. Boone, A. E. Anderson, W. A. Caldwell, Ned G. Lovett, Oscar Thompson, L. C. At the request of Burgess, Captain of Detectives Taylor yesterday assigned Detective Lieutenant Pilkas to help the prosecutors in discovering new witnesses, if any could be found.

litical campaign, passed the limits of license in slander.

"I don't wish to see the Rev. Shuler's radio closed. But we should remember, Motley Flint was assassinated by a man who carried a well-thumbed copy of Shuler's booklet, "Julian Thieves." And we should remember on Tuesday night Shuler implied this is a nation whose poor are being ground to death and that a revolution may be the answer within twenty-five years. And we know if these words had been spoken by an obscure person in the Plaza he would now languish in jail.

WANT SPEECHES LIMITED

"I think some competent organization of citizens should bring this state of affairs before the hearing of the Federal Radio Commission and find out if it isn't possible to force Mr. Shuler on his noncommercial, educational radio to stay within the limits of the job for which he was ordained. Perhaps this may somewhat curb his effectiveness as radio mayor of Los Angeles, but that wouldn't cause much distress.

"And, while talking about mayors and radios, that reminds me. Some time ago KMTR put a remote control panel into my office to allow me to broadcast from my desk. During the past week, before I resigned, when this Shuler situation was becoming tense, Mayor Porter directed those in charge to remove the instruments from my office; and to put them in his suite in the City Hall. Those in charge pointed out the arrangement was embarrassing and rather affronting to me.

RECEIVES THREATS

"That's all right," the Mayor is reported to have said. "It doesn't matter about Nix."

"So you see the ghost mayor up in Trinity Methodist Church even attempts to muzzle free expression of speech and thought of those unlucky city officials he wants to dismiss.

"Many persons who sign themselves Shulerites and other appropriate pseudonyms are sending me threatening letters. Some promise to beat me up on sight and others say they may blow up my home. I don't take this sort of thing very seriously. But it does worry my family. I've sent them to a quiet spot where they need have no fear.

"But in the meantime I think it would be a gallant gesture if the mayor up in Trinity Methodist Church would advise his enthusiastic friends to lay off. You never know what shaky-minded fanatics might do. One killing in this kind of a mess is all that any of us should have on his conscience."

EDITOR PRAISES PANAMA CANAL

George Horace Lorimer Says Its Efficiency Marvel

'Saturday Evening Post' Head Here for Vacation

Fred Stone and Family on Visit to Will Rogers

The Panama Canal and the new merchant fleet will be two foremost factors in America's commercial progress, in the opinion of George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, an arrival from New York aboard the Panama-Pacific electric liner Pennsylvania, in yesterday morning with 627 cabin passengers. Accompanied by Mrs. Lorimer and Garet Garrett, staff writer for the Post, Mr. Lorimer is here for a month's vacation.

"The Panama Canal is one of the greatest examples of American efficiency I have ever seen and one of the marvels of the age," said Mr. Lorimer. "Its operation is so perfect, so sure and so silent that everyone who sees it is deeply impressed. I can think of nothing on a voyage to equal the transit of the isthmus from sea to sea."

NAMES DON'T SELL STORIES

The veteran journalist is an annual visitor to California, but this voyage was his first via the Canal. Discussing literature in general and the Saturday Evening Post in particular, Mr. Lorimer said that names count for nothing in selection of material for his publication.

"If a story is good, it is the story that brings acceptance," he explained. "If it is not good, no name will save it."

STONE FAMILY ABOARD

The Pennsylvania's California passengers also included Fred Stone, veteran Broadway comedian, here to spend the summer with Will Rogers, accompanied by Mrs. Stone and their daughters Dorothy, Carol and Paula; Robert Hollander, New York investment broker; Julio Alvarada, Panaman Consul at St. Nazaire, France, and Willoughby R. Dobbs, New York attorney.

John Carstairs, senior chief engineer of the Panama-Pacific fleet, is back at the controls of the Pennsylvania after a golfing vacation in Scotland, his native land. The ship brought in 4000 tons of cargo, including 7280 stems of bananas from the Canal.

SAVED OUR OLYMPICS

Col. William May Garland deserves all the honors being showered on him. When he went to Europe the outlook was pretty bleak for our 1932 Olympic Games. The European athletes had no intention of coming. They said it was too far and too expensive. The prospect was for us to have a lonely old-home week just by ourselves. Col. Garland went over with a special rate from the railroads and steamship lines that sounded like the last day of a bankrupt sale. At the result of his good salesmanship, it is now assured that the 1932 Olympics will be the greatest in history. This despite the contemptible underground knocking of the Eastern States. Nice boys, these eastern fellows.

"GOOD-BY, LIBERTY"

"Good-by to Liberty," sniffles the attorney for the Reds who were arrested in the May Day riots. He says the parade was a plea by poor but honest workmen for employment.

If you want to know the real reason for that demonstration, read the latest book of Leon Trotzky and the thirty-seven-column, seven-hour speech made by Stalin urging the Reds to undermine the American government while investors are still suffering from the Wall-street crash.

THE DEMON BANKERS

The death of Motley Flint is a tragic incident in the loose talk about "they"—the bankers—who bring on this and that disaster.

The silliest feature of this talk is about bankers bringing on world wars. Every time there is a crack in the stock market, the boob public firmly believes that "they" are bringing off some mysterious international movement.

The reason that stock markets react so quickly to international political movements is not because the bankers possess mysterious secret information. It is because they do not—and so are seized with unreasonable panics.

CITY DEATH TOTALS LOWER

Health Report for Fiscal Year Shows Decrease in Mortality Despite Population Gain

Total deaths from all causes in Los Angeles for the fiscal year ending June 30, last, numbered 13,555, compared to 13,570 in the previous fiscal year and 12,730 the year before that, according to figures compiled by E. W. Peterson, deputy registrar of the Los Angeles Health Department. This is a reduction of fifteen deaths despite the large increase in population.

Deaths from violence, including murder, accidents and kindred causes, showed a considerable increase, with a total of 1326, compared to 1265 for the previous year and 1190 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928.

Heart disease led the list in the cause of deaths in Los Angeles with a total of 2418, fifteen more than in the previous year, when the total was 2403, and 1857 in 1928. Cancer caused 1567 deaths, compared to 1453 the previous year and 1368 in 1928. Tuberculosis was the cause of 1276 deaths, considerably less than in the previous year, when the total was 1496.

Nephritis caused 1103 to pass, compared to 1245 last year and 1106 the year before. Pneumonia took 816, more than 100 less than last year, when the total was 906. In 1928 the total was 915.

Deaths from quarantinable diseases took 181 this year, 158 last year and 175 the year before. Other causes took 4868 this year, 5067 last year and 4870 in the previous fiscal year.

COMMUNICABLE ILLS IN COUNTY SHOW DECLINE

Compilation of data for the months of May and June of this year indicates that communicable diseases in Los Angeles county are approximately 20 per cent below normal for this time of the year, according to a report made by the Bureau of Communicable Disease Control to Dr. J. L. Pomeroy, county health officer.

While communicable diseases as a whole are reported to be below normal, it is pointed out that infantile paralysis and measles are five times more numreous than the average for the last five years. However, neither of the diseases has reached major epidemic proportions, it is stated.

Failure of persons to regard whooping cough seriously is blamed for a slight rise above normal and a comparatively high death rate among children and sometimes adults. A drop in diphtheria cases to one-sixth the usual number of cases is credited to the immunization campaign of the county health department during the last few years.

NINE NEW CASES OF PARALYSIS REPORTED

Nine new cases of infantile paralysis were reported to the health department yesterday in communications received from Los Angeles physicians through the mail, making the total 101 for the month to date, with seven deaths. For the previous twenty-four hours none was reported and the sudden increase is accounted for by the fact that the reports took some time to reach the health department.

The total for June was eighty-four cases and six deaths.

Warm Sun and Gentle Breeze in Store Today

While weather reports from other sections of the country indicated hot weather, Los Angeles enjoyed a typical Southern California day, with the thermometer registering only a maximum of 82 deg. This temperature reading was just 2 deg. under that for July 19 of last year.

According to Col. Hersey, weather forecaster for this district, the temperature is normal for this season of the year.

The forecast for today indicates the temperature will be about the same as yesterday's, with gentle breezes from the sea. In the early morning hours fog is forecast, while during the day there will be drifting, light clouds.

UNCLE SAM'S STRONG ARM QUELLS ROW

Ballarat Mining War to Halt Till Federal Court Unravels Quarrel

Temporary peace reigns in the battle between three women and a group of Inyo county men over the Ballarat Mining Corporation properties.

Deputy United States Marshal Finn, returning from the gold mines in the Pleasant and Panamint mountain ranges, said he served a Federal injunction on the men whom the women accuse of barring them from their property.

The injunction calls for the appearance of Deputy Sheriff Clair of Inyo county, W. D. and John Clair and officials of an Inyo county bank here on the 28th inst. to show cause why it should not be made permanent. Finn said the papers were accepted without comment.

The women, Mrs. Orpha Hart, her daughter, Elizabeth, and Mrs. Mary Thompson, assert the Clair group has taken possession of the mines and through threats drive away laborers sent to the property by the women to complete assessment work.

The plaintiffs represent that if the assessment work is not finished by the 31st inst. they will lose title. They said the mines are valued at $10,000,000 and they recently refused an offer of $8,000,000 for them.

FITTS GETS BACKING OF UNION MEN

Indorsement of Candidacy by Central Labor Council Announced by Secretary

Indorsement of Buron Fitts for Governor by the Los Angeles Central Labor Council was announced yesterday by J. W. Buzzell, secretary of the council, who declared that Fitts is more acceptable to organized labor than any other candidate for Governor.

One of the outstanding factors that appealed to the Council, according to some of its spokesmen, was the fact that since he has been in the District Attorney's office, Fitts has raised salaries of his staff and at the same time cut down the general expenses of the office.

Fitts's supporters declare that, with Fitts in the Governor's chair, there will be an industrial accident commission that will function for the benefit of all laboring men, whether in or out of the unions. Criticism has been directed at the present administration at Sacramento because of reported indifference toward some of the outstanding problems affecting labor.

The cost of workmen's compensation insurance has increased four times since Gov. Young took office, his opponents say. The present rate of $9.42 per $100 of pay roll in the mining industry, for instance, is regarded as an unnecessary burden that can be lightened by intelligent administration. The seriousness of this problem is demonstrated by the fact that there are about 93,000 disabling injuries to workmen in the State each year.

W. L. HODGES FUNERAL TO BE TUESDAY

Body Brought Here from Bay City Where His Death Occurred Thursday

Walter L. Hodges, 65 years of age, formerly of Los Angeles and well known as a sportsman, died at San Francisco Thursday after a lingering illness. The body has been brought to Los Angeles for interment and the funeral will be conducted Tuesday at 2 p.m. at the Garrett Brothers mortuary, 921 Venice Boulevard. Dr. Moffett of St. John's Church will be in charge of the services. Interment will be in Forest Lawn Mausoleum.

Mr. Hodges was born in Vermont. He had lived in California thirty years. He organized the Pacific Rock and Gravel Company, later known as the Union Rock Company and now the Consolidated Rock Company. He retired from business in 1922.

For several years Mr. Hodges made his home in Honolulu, but of late years had been living at his mountain ranch at Trinity Center, where he was engaged in raising saddle horses.

He leaves his widow, Mrs. Agnes A. Hodges; a daughter, Mrs. Wiley Weaver, Jr.; a son, Bernard Hodges, and two sisters, Mrs. Frank Foell and Mrs. Ella Moore.

Pallbearers will be D. W. Puntius, George M. Thompson, W. E. Burke, Howard Chenoweth, Thomas J. Day and Harry M. Cole.

The "base titles" are claimed as the property of the Title Insurance and Trust Company, which sued the Security Title Company for $20,000, asserting that the legal data on which the titles are based were accumulated by the plaintiff after examination of 1,100,000 court orders and were sold to the defendant by a dishonest employee of the plaintiff.

DISAPPEARANCE OF MAN REPORTED BY SISTER

Alex Grant, 60 years of age, of 1202 West Thirty-sixth Place, is reported missing by his sister, Mrs. Janet Carter, who says that he disappeared last Tuesday and has not been seen since. At the time of his disappearance he was wearing a dark gray suit with a brown fedora hat and had eyeglasses on. Anyone knowing of his whereabouts is asked to call REpublic 6746.

SUICIDE VICTIM RICH ARIZONAN

Papers Identify Body Found in Lincoln Park

Was C. G. Steele, Former Tempe Councilman

Self-destruction Laid to Fear of Blindness

Instead of being a homeless derelict, oppressed by failure to find work, Charles G. Steele, who shot himself to death in Lincoln Park last Friday night, was yesterday revealed to be a retired capitalist of Tempe, Ariz., and a former Councilman of that city.

From his prostrated widow and friends Los Angeles police gathered a tragic story of Mr. Steele's haunting fear of blindness which is believed finally to have caused him to seek the seclusion of a quiet, tree-shaded nook in the park, and to send a bullet through his heart.

ACTIVE IN POLITICS

Mr. Steele was 60 years of age. He was partly identified through letters and cards found on his body. Yesterday the police communicated with the authorities at Tempe, who declared that not only was Mr. Steele a man of means, but that he had been a highly respected resident of the Arizona city for the last thirty years.

Originally residents of Chicago, Mr. and Mrs. Steele went to Tempe in 1900. An important irrigation project west of Tempe was undertaken some time later by the late Dwight B. Heard of Phoenix, and Mr. Steele became an associate with him in that enterprise.

Later he expanded his activities to include the operation of cotton gins and threshing machines.

He became active not only in politics, which resulted in his being elected Councilman, but also in civic and fraternal affairs.

WIDOW COLLAPSES

Three years ago, partly because of his failing eyesight, he retired from active business. He consulted physicians in the hope of saving his vision, but without benefit, according to friends.

Recently he decided to come to Los Angeles and, in the belief of friends, found similar discouragement in quest of an oculist who could save his eyes.

It is believed he then decided to kill himself.

Mrs. Belle Steele collapsed when she was informed of his death, a dispatch from the Arizona city last night stated. She was quoted as saying that with the possible exception of his failing vision she knew no reason for his act.

STREET EXTENSION SOUGHT

The Wilshire-Pico Association yesterday asked the City Council for a petition to be circulated for the extension of Beacon street from Seventh street to Wilshire Boulevard, a stretch of about 470 feet. The request was referred to the City Engineer and the Street Opening and Widening Committee.

LEADERS GIVE SUCCESS HINTS

Necessary Qualifications of Supremacy Listed

When to Say "Yes" or "No," One Man's Secret

Experts in Various Lines Advise Youths

The third installment of the series of opinions on the principal moral, mental and physical qualifications which make for success in life compiled from the testimony of men who have achieved success in their respective lines of endeavor is presented by The Times below. To thousands of Southern California's young men and women, just graduated from our high schools and colleges and face to face with the concrete problems of life, these questions are of the first importance. Another will appear next Sunday.

JOHN G. BULLOCK

(1.) Purpose.
(2.) Energy.
(3.) Character.
(4.) Determination.

Life is what we make it. An aimless life cannot be a successful life. One should decide upon a plan and purpose in life, adopt high ideals, set a goal that will constantly be an incentive to push forward and upward.

JOHN G. BULLOCK

Always having a worth-while objective, there is a joy and satisfaction in knowing at the end of every day, month and year, that progress toward the goal has been made.

Energy to study how, courage to stick to the task, determination to achieve the goal which has been set will insure success.

Strive to build a character and reputation that inspires confidence. The endeavor to do things better than they have been done before brings a reward of satisfaction to the individual and at the same time encourages others to excel also.

Aim high and with energy, courage and determination, go forward to a worthy goal.

That is success.

BURON FITTS
District Attorney of Los Angeles County

(1.) Sincerity.
(2.) Courtesy.
(3.) Industry.
(4.) Application.
(5.) Concentration.
(6.) Memory.

The true basis of success, in my opinion, is sincerity. This quality is within the reach of all men and when cultivated produces the type of success achieved by Lincoln and Washington. Coupled with sincerity, I would add in their order of importance, memory, industry, application and courtesy. The latter quality does more for many a man's success than other forms of ability.

BURON FITTS

I have found that the cultivation of a good disposition is one of the basic factors to insure success, for in the mass of living associations success is largely built up from a series of favorable impressions.

Other vital factors that have attributed to my own progress I have found to be industry, application and memory. Probably the human family possesses no more important quality for business and professional success than memory and when sharpened by concentration and study, it has worked wonders for me.

J. L. VAN NORMAN
President, Board of Education

(1.) When to say, Yes.
(2.) When to say, No.
(3.) When to say nothing.

These requirements to me are the fundamentals of success. Three others which I consider important for a successful life are Godliness, education and energy.

J.L. VAN NORMAN

Godliness embraces all the characteristics necessary to the inspiration of confidence, both in yourself and in the minds of others.

Education is the ability to understand and adapt yourself to your environment.

Energy is the urge properly to use your equipment.

LOUIS F. GOTTSCHALK
Musician, composer, director

(1.) Energy.
(2.) Hard work.
(3.) Honesty—to self and others.
(4.) Fearlessness.

No man can get anywhere without energy; no real man. I am presupposing that you possess the cardinal virtues, for otherwise you'll arrive nowhere, anyhow. Energy connotes hard work; no one can succeed by dalliance. You must be honest — not only to yourself, which so many are not, but to those who employ you and with whom you work. In other words, play the game in a square fashion all around.

Louis Gottschalk

And be fearless—not bumptious, nor foolhardy, by all means. But be sure you are right and then stick to your opinion. You will make

Treatment for Infantile Paralysis Explained

Care of Muscles During Ordeal Outlined

Pads Should be Adopted to Overcome Weakness

BY MILTON H. BERRY

(This is the second of a series of weekly articles written for The Times by Mr. Berry, of 2308 Nottingham avenue, Hollywood, on the prevention of infantile paralysis and the care of children during and after attacks of the disease. Mr. Berry has handled some 2000 such cases of after-treatment and has become internationally known for his success in apparently hopeless cases of paralysis by his method of "muscle re-education," which is in no way related to medical or surgical treatment. The third article will appear next Sunday.)

After seeing many hundreds of children who were deformed because of the after effects of infantile paralysis, or because of wrong handling during the acute stage of the disease, I am certain that those who have already been stricken, or any who may be, can benefit through this advice.

It is common knowledge with all medical men and a great many laymen that the structural part of our bodies is only held straight and supported by the equal strength of the muscles. At the time of the attack of the disease the muscular and nervous system of the body has been terribly shocked; some muscles and nerves may have become injured permanently to the extent that certain muscles can no longer support in a normal way certain bones, either at the joints or in their sockets.

MUST END STRAIN

It, therefore, becomes necessary in order to relieve immediately the strain of the body weight from each joint to elevate certain parts of the body with soft pads. Place a pad under the neck to support the head, place pad large enough to fill the hollow in the small of the back; extend each arm out from the body about four inches, then bend the arm at the elbow halfway and elevate the elbows about one inch by placing pads under them. The legs should be ten inches apart at the knees and in a straight position with a pad under each knee to elevate it not more than one inch. A pad also under each heel and a soft padded board for the feet to rest against, making certain that the ball and heel are resting equally against the board. This is to prevent the feet from dropping. Watch carefully that the bedcovers do not rest heavily upon any part of the body.

EXERTION PERILOUS

At no time should the patient be allowed to make the slightest bodily movement—everything should be done by the nurse or those in attendance; the turning of the body, the feeding or any little detail that would bring into action the slightest muscular movement, should be prevented; for only in this way will the muscles and nerves have the rest which nature positively requires after such a shock.

The first movement of any muscle should be volitional and not by the body motions.

In my next article I will describe in detail how to exercise without causing any bad effects upon the muscles.

mistakes, but they can be corrected; only the coward or trimmer, who is all things to all men and true to none, is looked upon as a failure in this regard.

Think out the path you would like to follow; give it the benefit of your youthful energy; work hard at it; be square in all your dealings, and have no fear of your future. That way success lies, no matter what vocation you select or what your place in life.

LOUIS M. COLE
President, Royal Packing Company

1—Objective.
2—Devotion to it.
3—Find yourself.
4—Stability.

My opinion is that a young man or woman beginning life should plan an objective first; know where he wishes to go; pick out as far as possible the work for which he is best fitted; then devote himself to it. If he has made a wise choice, he will ascertain that by studying himself and his uses and abilities in the job he has selected—he will find himself. If he has made a poor choice—or if circumstances have compelled him to take a job for which he is not fitted, let him make a change—but not until he has demonstrated that fact. And not until he has found another place that suits him better.

LOUIS M. COLE

Haphazard trying out this and that are the curse of business today so far as young people are concerned and far too many will give up what looks like a good future for a present that is seldom any better, just for a mere few dollars increase in pay. The man who is placed well should have stability; his boss will value him for it and his progress will be greater than if he shifts about with every wind.

Have your objective if you can; change if you must, but do not change unless you are clearly convinced that it is for your best, and not till you have found a new place that is convincingly better for you

Today's Bible Text

If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be likeminded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind.—Phil. ii, 1-2.

DOLLARS AND DOUGH NUTS

Some one figures that out of each dollar spent by city visitors from out of town, 17 cents go to hotels; 27 to retail stores, 20 to restaurants and 10 to transportation. The other 26 cents are not allocated; but possibly it would be discreet not to pursue the matter further.

HUNCHES

Specific instances come to light now and then to encourage those who believe in psychology. Just before the Interlachen battle Bobby Jones was asked if he expected to win. His reply was this: "If I am defeated, the man who wins will have to beat 287." That was his score and no one topped him.

WOMAN IN CONGRESS

More skirts in Congress. Mrs. James A. Hughes of Huntington, W. Va., is expected to bag the nomination to succeed her husband, who was a member of Congress for sixteen years preceding his death. Most of the Congressional matrons have gained their seats through the passing of the husband, but some are able to make it under their own power. There is no question about Mrs. Hughes knowing her Washington.

FOREIGN POPULATION

Chicago has a vast foreign population. According to the census reports the Poles are in the lead. There are over 400,000 of them and they keep the stockyards and the steel industries going. There are almost as many Poles as there are in Poland's greatest city. The Germans come next. There are 350,000 of them. Chicago is also thought to have the greatest Negro population of any city on earth. There are now over 200,000 of them and they have the only dusky Congressman at Washington. The Negroes are not able to elect a Representative in the South, but they can do it in Chicago.

KNOCKING OUR FILMS

The Argentinians are seeking to build up a motion-picture industry of their own. In Buenos Aires there is something of a crusade against American films. It is proposed by local ordinance to levy a license tax of 200 per cent on the theaters showing American pictures. If they offer part Argentine films the tax will be but 50 per cent. If they present none but their home-brew pictures there will be no tax at all. It is figured that this drastic tax will ultimately drive American pictures from their screens. Doubtless the Americans can meet the situation by going to Argentina to build some of their films.

IN STORAGE

The White House wine glasses of other administrations and years have been placed in storage by President Hoover. Some of the cut glass is a half-century old; but it had to go.

He did not relegate the little stem-winders of the human spirits to the museum without due deliberation. Commissions were appointed and all the tongues tuned up by ardent spirits were allowed to effervesce their best. Some of them frothed at the mouth and others retained their equanimity; but from the trip of the wine glasses to the storage plant it is easy to infer that little impression was made on the President.

The wine glass does not seem to be regarded by the big engineer as essential to clarity of thought in momentous decisions. It is quite evident that he does not esteem the fragile stems sufficiently strong to uphold the government. Looking through the bottom of a wine glass seems to fall as an enlarger of the vision of a diplomat. The trouble with those little liquid containers is that they make big things look little at times and little things assume enormous proportions. So they were put into storage along with other has-beens.

Some Presidents stowed the pictures of their predecessors away in the attic; others put the antique furniture into storage. But President Hoover lets the gang blow bubbles to the bursting point and then sends the glassware of the White House sideboard to the national junk house.

THE NEWSPAPER MAN

A Los Angeles newspaper man, active in his profession for nineteen years here, has just been convicted and sentenced on a charge of extortion, it appearing that he had planned to use his paper as a means to blackmail his victims.

Almost simultaneously a Chicago newspaper man, eighteen years on the staff of one of the country's largest journals, was slain by gangsters. Subsequent investigation seems to have established that his relations with gangland were much more intimate and personal than his professional duties required. The same inquiry uncovered a variety of unsavory rumors touching certain other Chicago newspaper men.

These incidents have attracted national attention. They have been seized upon by some who have reasons of their own for disliking newspapers as the basis for innuendo and open attack upon the integrity of journalism in general. As a matter of fact, they are proof of the contrary. The fact that these isolated instances of trust betrayed created so general a sensation is sufficient evidence of their unusual character. As in the case of the man who bit the dog, news is attention-arresting in proportion as it is unique. If it were a common thing for reporters to go wrong, there would be nothing particularly remarkable about these cases.

There is probably no calling in which opportunities and temptations to misuse his functions to his own profit are so numerous as in that of the newspaper man—and, by the same token, there is none in which the average of integrity and responsibility is higher. His duties daily throw the newspaper reporter into intimate contact with every variety of corrupting influence to which his honesty in the discharge of those duties is an active menace. Upon him devolves the responsibility of keeping society informed of the activities of its enemies, by no means all of whom are objects of immediate interest to the police. If he can be bribed to make a false or even a favorably colored report of these activities or to ignore them or any part of them, his opportunities to do so will be numerous and tempting. The honest and aggressive newspaper is incomparably the most formidable opponent of the hordes of evildoers and exploiters of the public, but for the effectiveness of its efforts even the most aggressive newspaper is very largely dependent upon the individual integrity of the men it sends out to get the facts. That that high trust is seldom betrayed or in any degree slighted or evaded is one of the best-justified boasts of journalism.

Few of the country's millions of newspaper readers, perhaps, realize the degree to which the discharge of their duties as citizens and the conduct of government itself are dependent upon the integrity of the newspaper man. It has been said that 90 per cent of the average adult American's reading is of newspapers and of matter based upon published news. While this may be a slight exaggeration, it is indisputable that the newspaper constitutes practically the sole source of information of the ordinary citizen on the processes of government and the conduct of public servants. Upon that information his participation as a sovereign voter is predicated. The choice of public officials, from the President down, and thereby the whole fabric and character of government and of governmental acts, is largely determined by the impressions created in the minds of the electorate by the collective work of the newspaper man. How important it is that that work shall be honest, able and free from personal bias and prejudice needs no elaboration.

As a corollary, it is equally clear that only that newspaper whose content is honest, trustworthy and free from the taint of selfish interest can long retain the confidence of the public which depends on it for truthful information. That journal which, for the sake of temporary advantage or for the service of personal ends, departs from the narrow path of strict integrity in news, early forfeits such confidence and with it loses its principal business asset. In that sense no permanently successful newspaper can be a private business enterprise, conducted primarily for the purpose of making money at the expense of disinterested public service. The real newspaper is a public institution, functioning as the eyes, the ears and the voice of the people it serves, its first interest the public interest, whether or not that interest coincides with its immediate own. Exactly in proportion as that function is honestly and ably discharged does a newspaper succeed in the long run, in the commercial as in every other sense.

It follows that the honest and well-conducted newspaper insists upon the highest standard of integrity on the part of its news-gatherers and editors. A journal which retains an employee of whose honesty it has grounds even for suspicion shares equal or greater responsibility for his acts.

Such cases are fortunately rare. The great majority of newspaper men are keenly aware of their responsibility and jealous of their profession's deservedly high reputation for integrity. In the infrequent and isolated instances where a newspaper man goes wrong, his severest condemnation invariably proceeds from his fellows of the craft.

KITTYHAWK

Even as New England discovered Kipling and gave him to Old England, so France and Britain have been the first to appreciate Wilbur and Orville Wright. At least they were the first to memorialize them.

The citizens of Le Mans, France, have erected a monument in honor of Wilbur Wright on the spot where he first flew his plane above French soil. A shaft has been lifted and the Stars and Stripes flung from it to commemorate the first successful European flight of a heavier-than-air machine.

The British Museum houses the first plane of the Wright brothers. It was offered to the Smithsonian Institution at Washington; but the officials questioned its being the first plane to fly and bickered it out of the country.

Evidently inventors as well as prophets are "not without honor, save in their own country." The two United Brethren preacher's boys are now to be given a suitable memorial at Kittyhawk, N. C., where Wilbur and Orville Wright first flew their plane on December 17, 1903. The spot will be landscaped and highways constructed so that the motor public may make pilgrimage to it. A granite boulder with a bronze tablet now serves as a marker telling of the heroic episode in conquering the air. A stately lighthouse whose beams will reach the se. will also serve as an air beacon on the historic and almost inaccessible site.

The people of New Castle, Ind., have finally awakened to the fact that they have a prize in the old farm where the Wright boys were born. They have purchased it and another shrine will be developed and preserved for future generations. In time to come it may become the most sentimental of all places connected with the famous inventors.

As a President may not hope to have his picture on a postage stamp until he is dust, so it seems that no genius may expect too much of his countrymen while he lives.

CALL FOR FREEDOM

Now Porto Ricans are clamoring for independence—at least many of those who have a flair for politics. When the islanders went under the protection of Uncle Sam they looked for instant and enduring prosperity. Many have been disappointed. They find that prosperity may not be assured without working for it. The Americans have wrought wonders on the island. They have made it sanitary and healthful and they have put in many roads. The general advance is beyond description, but of course, there are discontented souls who must express their griefs. Another generation may feel differently.

ANOTHER PIONEER

The late Wilbur E. Cummings, who built a fine home at the head of Normandie avenue, is said to have been the pioneer in opening up the Hollywood hills for residential purposes. Well, he surely started something and added a mass of riches to the community.

The LEE SIDE O' LA
BY Lee Shippey

Personal Glimpses of Famous Southlanders

IF YOU were a poor boy, compelled to go to work at the age of 9 to help support a needy family and expecting nothing from life but drudgery, and suddenly not one but two fairy godfathers appeared on the scene, took you away to a strange and wonderful country and gave you the start from which you rose to be a world-famous actor, and after ten years of that you married a gracious and charming millionairess, do you think you would feel quite happy and satisfied?

You think you would. But you wouldn't unless, after all, you were doing just the work you wanted to do in just the way you wanted to do it, and receiving deserved recognition for it.

If you doubt it, ask Antonio Moreno.

Two Godfathers and Godmother

The life of Tony Moreno is a perfect fairy story in real life. He was born in Madrid and spent his early boyhood in a little town near Gibraltar. At the age of 9 he was apprenticed to a baker and for four years he worked at the baker's trade. Then one day two American tourists, interested by the boy's fine features and native grace, asked him his name. The boy removed his cap, bowed and answered:

"Antonio Garida Moreno Montagudo, at the service of you and God."

One of the tourists spoke Spanish and translated for the other. Both were charmed. They looked up the boy's mother and offered to take Antonio to America and educate him. She had her hands full with the rest of the family and consented.

Those two fairy godfathers were Benjamin Curtis of New York, a nephew of Seth Lowe, then Mayor of the metropolis, and Enrique de Cuizat Zanetti, a New York professional man born in Cuba. They took Antonio to New York and placed him in school in Northampton, Mass. Later they placed him in the home of a Mrs. Charlotte Morgan, who became such a real mother to him that the two men faded out of the picture, ceasing to contribute to his support.

It is one of the deep regrets of Moreno's life that Mrs. Morgan died before he had won success, so that he was never able to repay her except with his affection.

When $10 a Week Looked Good

Antonio didn't dazzle Northampton. He worked for the local telephone company and read meters for the electric light company. He thought he was doing fairly well when a hosiery manufacturing company gave him a steady job at $10 a week in its shipping department. He had no training whatever for the stage, but he had a natural gift for acting. He decided that even $10 a week was not so much for an ambitious young man and determined to become an actor. He picked up a few odd bits in juvenile roles in New York, but the engagements were short and not consecutive. Often the $10 a week he had left in Northampton loomed up in memory like a fortune. But he got one job which lasted twenty-eight weeks—with Mrs. Leslie Carter—which sort of established him. By that time he had dropped his surname of Montagudo.

The Inevitable Griffith

A dull season came and again the young actor was jobless. He'd thought of trying motion pictures, but feared that if he did the theatrical producers would ban him, as at that time the stage producers thought all they had to do was frown on the movies for a while and they would die out. A jobless man who really wants to work, though, will try anything, so Moreno reluctantly turned to motion pictures.

He got work now and then as an extra. Then D. W. Griffith, discoverer and maker of so many stars, noticed his work and offered him a steady job at $40 a week.

Fairy Story Comes True—Even to Princess

Fame and wealth came quickly after that. In a few years he was ranked by millions of fans all over the world as second only to Valentino as the great lover of the screen, the ideal leading man to play opposite a great woman star. The Spanish baker boy had become such a figure that once when he was traveling, a street urchin—a little Moorish boy—recognized him in the street of a little town in Northern Africa and pursued him through the town, imparting his suspicions to others as he went along and when Moreno got back to his hotel he was leading a procession.

At the height of his success, in 1923, he married Mrs. Daisy Canfield Danziger, daughter of E. L. Doheny's old partner in the oil business.

Popular For Sixteen Years

It takes great vehicles to make great actors. Some of the best have appeared in the wrong vehicles and have waned in public favor. The passing of Valentino seemed to leave Moreno an exceptional chance for pre-eminence, but no great plays were given him just then. He has held and still holds a great following. But he hardly holds the rank today to which his native gifts entitle him.

Still, he is one of the unique and interesting figures of the screen. He has been prominent for sixteen years and this year expects to have leading roles in eight pictures. Already he has made "Rough Romance" in English, "One Mad Kiss" in English and Spanish, "The Benson Murder Case" in Spanish and "The Bad Man" in Spanish. He also will appear in "The Cat and the Canary" and "The Command to Love" and probably in two other pictures.

Moreno is building a handsome home on the top of the highest hill in Laughlin Park and is greatly interested in that. He is a genial, likable chap and feels the content of a man who has a good record to look back on. But he is not entirely happy or satisfied. Though born in Spain, he loves the country which adopted him and in which he won success and likes to be classed as an American rather than as a Spaniard. He considers himself wholly American. He likes to play in English rather than in Spanish. But he would like to direct pictures intended for Spanish-speaking countries. He wants to keep working, though he has everything most of us think we are working for—a beautiful home, plenty of money and a charming wife. Still, he can be truly happy only when he has a good part to play and is working like the dickens.

Which is just one more proof that he is quite human. It is only children who find lasting delight in fairy stories.

WHAT OTHERS THINK ABOUT IT

WASHINGTON AND THE SPHINX
[Boston Transcript]

The gigantic face of Washington, carved on a granite mountain in the Black Hills by Gutzon Borglum, who is probably the greatest sculptor whom America possesses, was unveiled yesterday. It greatly exceeds in size the face of the Egyptian Sphinx. And it has a worthier purpose, since the face of Washington is a beneficent part of our nation's life and daily thought, whereas the Sphinx was but a dream. Upon the great wall in Dakota will also be carved Jefferson, Lincoln and Roosevelt—a worthy, an illustrious quartet, splendidly representative of American character and American history. But why the Black Hills? The vast memorials should stand among the people if they are to inspire and hearten coming generations. In a sense, those great Americans, though they were all born and all lived east of the Alleghenies, were Appalachian characters. They were men of our "Middle Kingdom," and light of their colossal countenances should look down upon the beaten paths of men.

However, it is a matter of interest and satisfaction to have the majestic and nobly brooding Washingtonian visage looming so grandly anywhere in the country.

IT MEANS FAIR PLAY
[Chicago News]

The American public joins with the medical profession in deprecating the growth of paternalism and bureaucracy in the United States and in demanding fair play for every liberal profession and every legitimate interest. But it expects broad-minded and candid treatment of any important problem facing the medical or any other profession, or the business world, and voluntary co-operation in wise efforts to solve the problem. That constitutes the best insurance against State action.

GOOD EXCUSE
[Detroit Free Press]

With the bookstores advertising such examples of modern literature as "Ex-Husband," "Ex-Wife," "Ex-Mistress" and "Ex-It," we can't understand why Warwick Deeping omitted the hyphen in his latest novel, "Exile."

THE WEEK IN POLITICS

BY KYLE D. PALMER

Holding some possibilities of humor, as well as having a direct bearing on the basic issues in the present contest for the Republican nomination for Governor, agitation of the question as to Gov. Young's right to present his candidacy for re-election as a bona fide member of the Republican party has been renewed with considerable energy as a result of developments of the week.

In his first radio speech of the present campaign delivered in Los Angeles, the Governor dwelt with reminiscent affection upon the fact that his entry into political life had been as a Republican. He managed to use the term "Republican" in several references to his political record and doubtless felt that he had made some progress in overcoming the bad consequences of his nonpartisan commitments made earlier in the campaign.

However, in his year-to-year recitation of his career as a "Republican," the Governor jumped clear over a very important—and in this contest a very pertinent—era of his personal political activities. In fact, he neglected the slightest mention of the year 1915—a very vital year in California's political history; for it was in the year 1915 that a well-organized and State-wide attempt was made to wipe out political party lines in this State.

The undertaking became so formidable that the leaders of all the major parties formed a joint committee and pointed out the evils of the proposition with such impressive effect as to cause defeat for the nonpartisan movement by a vote of the people that left no doubt as to the determination of Californians to maintain the integrity and force of political party organization.

Among the arguments advanced in the successful fight to defeat the nonpartisan amendment on the 1915 general election ballot was the following:

"Without the tie of party organization and responsibility to link us with the Federal government, it is a certainty that California will be eliminated from consideration by any national administration which may prevail at Washington. Therefore, the maintenance of party integrity reaches to the very root of our industrial, commercial, financial and agricultural development."

In his radio speech last week, Gov. Young did not refer to the situation in California which inspired the foregoing warning, and this despite the fact that the matter herein referred to relates to what was probably the Governor's greatest political effort—although a losing one.

The reason for such discreet silence, perhaps can be explained by the further fact that the Governor's political aspirations in 1915 cannot conveniently be made to fit logically in with his re-election protestations at the present writing; for if Gov. Young had succeeded in his political campaign in 1915 he would not now be running on any plank or platform as a Republican candidate.

There is nothing mysterious or obscure about it. In 1915 the Governor was warmly enthusiastic in his plan for destroying political parties in State elections. The plan was emphatically rejected by vote of the people and has never been submitted again. Now, in 1930, after one piece of campaign correspondence bearing his signature had been issued in reiteration of his nonpartisan convictions, the Governor is again seeking to present himself as a Republican.

In this regard it may be recalled that another aspirant for the Republican nomination for Governor, Mayor Rolph, has been forced temporarily to abandon his public approval of nonpartisanism while appealing for Republican support, but Gov. Young's record on the question is even more definite than that of the nonpartisan Bay City executive.

Writing the official argument in favor of the nonpartisan bill which the people rejected, Mr. Young had this to say:

"To inject national party lines into State government is to inject a false issue. To elect a Governor or a Legislature on party issues is like choosing the president and directors of a business concern because they are Democrats or Republicans or Progressives.

"Nonpartisanship in California is already an accomplished fact. This nonpartisan law is now a party measure."

The introduction of the bill sponsored by Mr. Young and defeated by the people came along coincidentally with a threatened break-up of the Johnson-McCabe political machine and quite obviously was designed to hold the machine in power. Political bossism as represented by the group with which Mr. Young is associated has never shown itself unduly favorable to strong party lines in California. Hence, it is neither surprising that Mr. Young should be nonpartisan in his personal views, nor illogical that he should desire those views to be withheld from the organization to which he now makes appeal—the Republican party.

If there is any disposition to doubt the serious menace which this party regularity issue constitutes to the Governor's re-election attempt the doubt may be quickly removed by checking up on sentiment among the Republican rank and file. The issue is a genuine one and one that is giving both Young and Rolph managers considerable disquiet.

Meanwhile, pledging himself to work for a strong party organization throughout the State, Dist.-Atty. Fitts had the largest and most enthusiastic reception of the present campaign last Friday in San Francisco, where more than 3000 men and women gathered to hear his discussion of State affairs.

The Fitts meeting in the Bay City not only surprised those who called it, but created, it is said, considerable consternation in other political camps, as the Young and Rolph organizations there have not conceded the Southern California candidate a baker's dozen of supporters in Mayor Rolph's home town.

Across San Francisco Bay in Berkeley, where Mr. Young's home is located, the southern aspirant is making an aggressive attempt to break up the Kelly machine's political control and thus put the Governor on the defensive in his own territory.

In Southern California the greatest political battle royal in local history is about to begin.

VISUAL EDUCATION

BY LANNIE HAYNES MARTIN

A great deal is being said about visual education today as though it were something entirely new, as if it were only discovered yesterday. Every well-brought-up child acquired its good manners, its sense of fitness, its instincts of courtesy through observation and all-wise parents have known, for many generations, the advantage of example over precept in teaching children.

There is a music manuscript in the old Mission at Santa Barbara, made by hand more than 100 years ago, and the notes are done in red, yellow and black. The good father who was trying to teach the Indians to sing found great difficulty in getting them to recognize the queer-shaped symbols perched like fat birds on a line and he pondered long on how he could best make them familiar to the eye. Suddenly he remembered the Indian's sense and love of color and he immediately transcribed the music score in brilliant scarlet and deep-chrome yellow, leaving one set of notes in black. The young savages, who before could not distinguish a whole note from a semi-quaver and who were extremely indifferent to the musical education which was offered them, grew excited and enthusiastic and put the rich color into their tones which they saw on the pictured page, some of them becoming beautiful singers.

The old manuscript lies now in a glass case, the colors somewhat faded, but still distinct, a remarkable exponent of the value of visual education.

The lady's comment at a recent art exposition that an ultra-modern artist must have gotten his education through a mail-order course, did not seem so much amiss to those who still believe in balance, perspective and the wholesome hints which nature gives. And it is through looking at nature, through actually seeing beauty, that artists have always learned the real principles of art. Trying to get it through abstract, philosophical aphorisms, results in some of the monstrosities which are now being foisted on the would-be progressives in art who really have no standards of their own.

What can these formless, purposeless pictures offer in the way of visual education themselves? They bring neither happiness nor enlightenment. They do not inspire creative effort or reflect imaginative impulse. We do not allow impressionable children to go through medical museums, why permit them to look at abnormalities in art?

WHERE CAN I LEARN

Harmony?

BY LOUISE L. TEMPLE

[Prepared in co-operation with the Los Angeles evening high schools. Questions concerning free evening classes will be answered if stamped addressed envelope is inclosed. Address Louise L. Temple, care of The Times.]

Eleanor D. Ferguson of the Boston Conservatory of Music and the University of Southern California gives a free course in harmony at the Polytechnic Evening High School, 400 West Washington Boulevard, on Monday, Wednesday and Friday evenings, 7 to 9. The class meets in room 356, on the third floor of the Auditorium Building.

Scale formation and harmonization of melodies with primary harmonies are studied; also chords, their construction, combination and application to all phases of music.

There is no charge of any kind, and people of all ages may enter at any time throughout the year, with the exception of the last two weeks in August and the Christmas, Easter and Fourth of July vacations. Books on musical subjects may be borrowed free of charge from the school library, but a deposit to cover the cost of the book is required. This deposit is returned in full as soon as the book is returned in good condition.

CASTLES

"In Xanadu did Kubla Khan
A stately pleasure dome decree,"
Yet his was but a sorry plan
Compared to castles built by me.
He reared his by a sacred stream
That ran through gorge and cavern rare;
Mine builded in a pleasant dream
Float like mirages in the air.

I know not if his inner halls
Were hung with tapestries of gold,
I only know my topping walls
Are matchless visions to behold.
And yet I do not rear with care
Firm structures that will not decay,
But castles I can idly tear
Down and build up again each day.

THE CANDIDATES

Candidates are gathering under the banner, I behold them everywhere, and they bow and beam and snicker when they greet me in my lair. And they treat me so politely, as their platform they produce, it would be a thing of sightly if I turned the wolf loose. Comes a man who's elected to the post of county clerk; he is able and inspired, he would doubtless do good work; but he interrupts my reading of the book of life I gloat; I behold his face exceeding, and remark, "He's in my vote. Any man who's campaigning when he may be a bore, mustn't go around explaining if I show him to the door." Comes a man who wants to be sheriff, and his errand is in vain; I'm not feeling like a seraph, I have nineteen kinds of pain. I would talk of fingerprints, of the pills I have to take; but he shuts me off in my duffer, with a spiel that makes me ache. If he gets the gate for he's chasing he will come in vice away; he will come in games debasing that the pleasant whereas, but he will not let me talk of my diseases, so I back him to the walk. One would join the legislature, there to save the public's goat; he is of one mind nature, and he seems to need my vote. But he comes when I am fretting, brooding over greenwood tree; in his help by forgetting that his goat is cheap to me. I have had my grievous troubles which I bore my thoughtful care; my words seem much like pearls as they float upon the air. vate trouble goads and me, brings the low noise to my throat; every time a phone man seeks me he is sure to in my vote.

UGLY "PLUS FOURS"

The Men's Dress Reform group, a group of Englishmen who are bent upon bringing about more practical changes in the wearing of men's clothes and manifesting a little sense and ventilation in the process, is the latest. Dr. A. C. Jordan, honorary secretary, recently read an address before the Royal Institute of Public Health in which he was ridiculous that such a garment as a dress uniform for men should be needed. The Times agrees with him. Why men have to be so hidebound in order to achieve what women have had without any fuss. For those fellows who still cling to the ridiculous "plus fours" we have no sympathy whatever. Knees are meant to be covered, and the fashion of wearing short trousers with black or dark stockings is one that physicians as well as sensible people deplore. Why not a man wear his professional robe if he wears white, which must be sent to the laundry after two wearings? Dark clothing cleaned only at long intervals must be a nuisance to dress, he said, it was more difficult to dress than fuss women than fuss women.

RIPPLING RHYMES

THE CANDIDATES

Candidates are growing thicker, I behold them everywhere; and they bow and beam and snicker when they greet me in my lair. And they treat me so politely, as their platforms they produce, it would be a thing unsightly if I turned the watchdog loose. Comes a man who'd be elected to the post of county clerk; he is able and respected, he would doubtless do good work; but he interrupts my reading of the book o'er which I gloat; I behold his form receding, and remark, "He's lost my vote. Any man who talks campaigning when he sees he is a bore, mustn't go around complaining if I shove him to the door." Comes a man who would be sheriff, and his errand is in vain; I'm not feeling like a seraph, I have nineteen kinds of pain. I would talk of things I suffer, of the pills I have to take; but he shuts me off; I'm duffer, with a spiel that makes me ache. If he gets the axe, he's chasing he will drive all vice away; he will stop the games debasing that the crooks and gamblers play. He is full of pleasant wheezes, but he will not let me talk of my forty-nine diseases, so I back him off the walk. One would join the Legislature, there to save the public's goat; he is of an earnest nature, and he seems to need my vote. But he comes when I am fretting, brooding 'neath my greenwood tree; in his folly he's forgetting that his graft looms cheap to me. I have dark and grievous troubles which require my thoughtful care; so his words seem much like bubbles as they float upon the air. Private trouble goads and treats my throat; every time a statesman seeks me he is sure to lose my vote.

UGLY "PLUS FOURS"

The Men's Dress Reform party is a group of Englishmen seriously bent upon bringing about some radical changes in the masculine garb. Sense and sanitation is the objective. Dr. A. C. Jordan, the honorary secretary, recently delivered an address before the Royal Institute of Public Health. He said: "It was ridiculous that such a movement as a dress reform party should be needed. Timidity and intolerance were the two main reasons why men had to be helped to achieve what women had won without any fuss. For those hideous and ridiculous 'bags' known as 'plus fours' were was no excuse."

He condemned the wearing of black or dark clothing especially by physicians as unCleanly. In making his professional visits Dr. Jordan wears white, which must be sent to the laundry after two days' wear. Dark clothing cleaned only at long intervals must be filthy. In regard to dress, he said, it was much more difficult to instill common sense into men than into women.

BROADCAST HITS STRIDE IN WORLD OF BUSINESS

Income and Outlay Totals Disclose New Industry to be Advancing to Foremost Ranks

BY JOHN S. DAGGETT

Substantial evidence as to the place radio has taken in the world of industry is afforded by the Pacific Coast division headquarters of the National Broadcasting Company. On this coast and in San Francisco alone it is spending approximately $1,500,000 annually.

One hears a great deal about the defects of the entertainment side of radio, defects which are as natural to the growth of this science as they are to the oil, the motion-picture or the automotive industry—but radio's advent in the commercial field is written in hard, cold cash figures. From the bootblack on the corner to the banks radio money is being spent and the clink of the dollars is every bit as genuine as those spent by the more ponderous industries.

Messages over the air help to sell cities, land ships, to the ends with their cargoes and, other than monetary ways, build up a morale among the people to whom it speaks that is unique. Far from being a sideline to the world's industrial circus, radio is the main tent—it is becoming a part of commerce's very foundations. Those who consider it a riot of sopranos and crooned romances do not end with the delivery of sound to the listening ear.

THEY SUMS INVOLVED

Throughout the country the two great chain broadcast systems spend and earn tremendous sums of money. They are discovering and developing sales channels that are functioning each day to the benefit of industrial and commercial thinking. Three years ago no one would have guessed that this new science would hold the position it does today. Each radio speaker is a salesman, an educator and an entertainer, a triple, economizer already used by one-fourth of the countries.

Before the public had the impression that radio programs were created merely to sell radio sets. Today the sale of sets is a minor item in the expenditure account of the 88 stations on the air.

BENEFITS TO WORKERS

To think of the automobile industry as having to do only with the sale of automobiles, forgetting the millions that are spent for research, equipment and salaries. In the same way, radio is lining the pockets of workers and putting to work the fellow who has worn out his leather seeking employment.

Very rapidly radio is entering the realm of specialization, which means more salaries and more employees to swing the line.

Perhaps a slogan of this still young industry should be "Reaching the Public." That is an art in itself, and its developments and successes are along entirely different lines than those followed by the screen, the publicity or the stage. The success of this fact is hardly apparent. Radio's evolution means the building up of financial recognition for thousands of people who do not think of it as merely a fad.

ON DIAL FOR SABBATH

Starting at 8:30 o'clock this morning and lasting another international figure will speak in an address from London—Thomas Masaryk, son of the Czechoslovakian President. His subject will be "United States of Europe." From 1 to 1:30 p.m. Columbia is to send his "Gauchos" with Ramon Lopez's Argentine Orchestra in half an hour of South American music and song. Then at 1:30 Edward Ware, formerly soloist with the Los Angeles Mormon Choir, to be featured in an hour of semi-classical melodies. Dick Creedon, radio feature director, assures us that he will be one of Sunday's "most interesting programs." Hawaii is to be the locale at 2:30 of the CBS Trustees, while lovers of organ music can do no better than to hear Jesse Crawford at 4 o'clock from Interlochen, Mich., the Majestic Hour at 5 tonight and the National High School Band of 250 and 150 voices, respectively, in an hour of classical music. For lovers of literature, Prof. Lindsley at 6:30 today is to give a reading of the "Rape of the Lauriat." KHJ's music at 9 tonight, when Victor Paige and a fifty-five-piece orchestra present a musical version of the growth of Los Angeles and offer the songs of its various periods of "The Floradora Girl," "Blue Paradise" and "Naughty Marietta" are a few more in an hour that should please those who appreciate good music.

OPERETTA SELECTIONS

Starting at 9:15 p.m. will bid for the title as the high spots of operetta music from 1910 to 1930. Music of three especially famous productions will be included—"Mlma, the Chin-Chin" and "Apple Blossoms." Vocal solos and interludes will be offered by Elliott Shaw, baritone, and Lewis James, tenor, with the Revelers' Quartet. At 6:45 Vincenzo Fiohri, Luis Alberto and Los Caballeros will stroll down El Camino Real with the strains of Spanish America. For those who like the Sarah Padden Playhouse, at 8:30 p.m. will present Sheridan's "School for Scandal." The play is to last three-quarters of an hour.

KECA will bring two religious services to the dial. The first will be that of Third Church of Christ, Scientist, at 10:30 a.m. while the Columbia Broadcasting Company is to send its Sunday Catholic Hour to the Cathedral at 7:15 tonight. Archbishop Curley will give thirty minutes of original character which should provoke thought, lovers of classic music are advised to dial the KECA station with Raine Bennett, director of the Air, as his guest artist.

GARDEN STATE BAND

Next to 2 points to its Westlake Park concert program. Marie Goldman will give a program of old-time melodies, with Helen Jepson, Harold Roberts and Dick Harris as guest soloists. The Garden State Band are to be heard in brass. At 7 tonight Ben Bernie and his Wranglers are to furnish an hour of music and comedy from the National Broadcasting studios in New York. For 9 tonight Josef Lhevinne, violinist, is to present a series of selections from Schumann's "Carnaval" to Schubert's "The Lark" by Balakirew. Folk songs will be featured. Intervals must be filthy. In regard to dress, he said, it was much more difficult to instill common sense into men than into women.

SURVEY OF NEEDS HERE TO BE MADE

Washington Officials on Way West for Study of Building Program

Three Federal officials from Washington will be in the city Wednesday to survey the needs of Los Angeles in regard to governmental buildings. The party will consist of Perry H. Heath, assistant Secretary of the Treasury; Arch Coleman, first assistant Postmaster-General, and John W. Phillip, fourth assistant Postmaster-General.

It is understood that two buildings are contemplated, one at the proposed new union station and the other elsewhere. They will cost approximately $11,000,000 each.

The Washington party will be here five days and will leave next Sunday, according to present plans. It is understood that one of the main reasons for the survey at this time is to work the new buildings into a harmonious whole with the Civic Center program.

Postmaster O'Brien was out of the city yesterday attending the State gathering of postmasters at San Francisco. In his absence Assistant Postmaster Foster said he was not advised as to just what the building program is at this time.

While here the officials will look into the matter of leases on properties now rented by the government for Federal purposes. Among these is the lease on the Arcade station, which has five years to run.

DRY RAIDERS SEIZE CARS AND LIQUOR

Federal Agents Declare Nucleus of Smuggling Ring Uncovered

What is believed by Federal dry agents to be the nucleus of an alcohol-smuggling ring was the center of a liquor raid by government agents, according to a report yesterday by Deputy Dry Administrator Peters. The raid, conducted by Peters and three assistants, resulted in the seizure of 500 gallons of Mexican alcohol, three automobiles and an assortment of liquors, all valued at $10,000, according to the report. The report showed that the raid was on the Master Garage, Forty-eighth street and Ninth avenue.

The dry agents watched the garage and observed a large truck enter it and shortly afterward a touring car left, they said. The agents followed the car and, stopping it, arrested Dave Wolf, the driver, and seized twenty-five five-gallon cans of Mexican alcohol, they stated. Later they entered the garage and searched the truck, where they said they found seventy-five five-gallon cans of alcohol. They also searched a car being repaired and found an assortment of liquors in it. The three cars and the liquor were seized. John Burmeister, said to be a part owner of the garage, also was arrested.

What Prospective HOME OWNERS Should Know!

Now is the opportune time to buy a home, or to buy a home-site and build. Building material costs are 10% to 60% less on the various items than seven years ago! Suitable locations may be picked up at undoubtedly attractive figures.

A rapidly decreasing supply of desirable home properties is resulting from the present low rate of home-building, and this is coupled with the steadily increasing population as convincingly shown by the 1930 census.

Why not take the first step today toward the enjoyment of a home of your own?—check the homes and the home-site offerings in The Times' real estate columns—naturally they represent the cream in values, for they are submitted by people who really want to sell.*

THREE TO FACE MURDER WIDOW

Oesterreich Witnesses to Come from Milwaukee

Costello Back from Trip of Investigation

Woman to Tell of Threat During Visit

Three witnesses, whose testimony will be vital to the prosecution's case in the approaching trial of Mrs. Walburga Oesterreich, will be brought from Milwaukee to Los Angeles to tell what they know of circumstances leading up to the murder of Fred Oesterreich, wealthy garment manufacturer, eight years ago, James P. Costello, deputy District Attorney in charge of the case, announced yesterday.

The announcement was made immediately after the deputy's return from the eastern city, where he has spent the last fortnight interviewing witnesses and preparing new evidence.

TRIAL DUE AUGUST 4

Otto Sanhuber, mysterious attic man of the Oesterreich household, already has been convicted of manslaughter as a result of the slaying but the judgment proved to be a legal stalemate because the court held that the manslaughter charge was outlawed and that the prisoner, therefore, must be released.

But Mrs. Oesterreich, who was indicted as a co-defendant with Sanhuber, still faces trial in Superior Judge Hardy's court on August 4, next.

Although Costello would not disclose the names of the three witnesses he has called, he indicated the nature of part of their expected testimony. One young woman, he said, formerly was employed in Oesterreich's Milwaukee office and was wont to stay with Mrs. Oesterreich during her husband's absence. She is expected to testify that on these occasions Mrs. Oesterreich always persuaded her to return to her own home stating that she was unafraid.

This witness also is expected to tell of one occasion when Mrs. Oesterreich complained to her of marital unhappiness and she suggested divorce as a remedy. Mrs. Oesterreich replied, "There is only one way to get away from that man," according to Costello.

SAW MAN'S LEGS

Another woman witness in Milwaukee was questioned by Costello concerning a visit to the Oesterreich home in Los Angeles several months after the murder. While on this visit, the woman said, she saw a man's legs protruding through an opening in a closet which apparently gave ingress to a secret room.

The woman was so frightened, Costello asserts, that she fainted and when she revived Mrs. Oesterreich attempted to persuade her that it was just her imagination. When the woman refused to be convinced, Mrs. Oesterreich warned her never to mention the incident to any one or "you will get the same thing Fred got," Costello said.

The third witness, believed once to have been a foreman in one of Oesterreich's garment factories, also as been called to testify. The nature of his testimony is being kept confidential by the District Attorney's office, but it is expected to be of utmost importance to the case.

Oesterreich was shot to death in his Los Angeles home on the night of August 22, 1922. No trace of the slayer was found until April 8, last, when Sanhuber was arrested and charged with the crime. At that time he admitted living in secret attic rooms in the Oesterreich homes for ten years and said that he fired the shots to protect Mrs. Oesterreich from her husband. During his trial Sanhuber repudiated the confession.

WEALTH WON IN LATIN LAND

Chinese on Way Home as Millionaire

Felix H. Choy and Family

A POOR Chinese boy when he went to the republic of Colombia twenty years ago, Felix H. Choy is going back home a millionaire. He passed through port yesterday on the Panama-Mail liner Colombia.

Choy not only accumulated a fortune through his mercantile enterprises at Buena Ventura, but also acquired a Spanish wife. The latter and their two children, Hector and Fausto, are accompanying him.

They will visit his old home in Canton for a year before returning to Colombia.

COLOMBIANS TO HOLD FETE ON LIBERATION

Colombia's Independence Day, marking the republic's liberation from Spain 120 years ago, will be observed today by the Colombian colony. Tribute will be paid to the memory of Gen. Simon Bolivar, leader for independence, by speeches to be given at gatherings. On the 28th inst. Peru will celebrate its one hundred and ninth anniversary of independence. Los Angeles Peruvians will celebrate with a basket picnic in Palisades Park, Santa Monica.

"In Peru the American Independence Day on July 4 is observed as a national holiday," said Senor Manuel Ayulo, Peruvian Consul. "The Peruvians have great admiration for America and this is particularly true of August B. Leguia, the President."

BROADWAY STORE WILL OPEN SALE

Event Starting Tomorrow Will Feature Contest of Department Managers

The doors of the Broadway Department Store will open tomorrow morning on its greatest sales event of the year—the thirtieth annual department managers' sale, which gets under way after months of preparation. More than 1500 extra employees will be ready to take care of the crowds that are anticipated and every detail for satisfactory service and delivery has been worked out.

A silver cup will be awarded winning departments each week during the sale, as well as cash prizes to the members of each winning section. Two grand prizes covering the entire period of the sale will be given at its termination and the department managers showing the greatest gains will also share in awards.

It is declared that wholesale markets offer the most advantageous buying conditions in many years and for this reason many of the values to be offered during the sale have not been possible since before the war. Buyers have been scouring the markets since early spring in anticipation of the event and the immense buying facilities of the Broadway have made it possible to take advantage of some unusual situations, whose savings are to be passed on to Broadway customers.

DISTRIBUTORS PICKED BY BOSCH COMPANY

Appointment of Collins-Lane Company, Ltd., as Southern California distributors of Bosch radio products, has been announced. The new distributors already are actively engaged in merchandising the Bosch line, which includes motor-car and motorboat radios, as well as the household sets. The new company is headed by Wilbur H. Collins, for five years California distributor for Kelvinator. Sales and promotion will be under the management of George Lane, widely known to the radio trade. Other officers are R. H. Collins and L. D. Robertson, both identified with the Collins-Kelvinator Company and other distributing organizations.

DEATH QUIZ ORDERED FOR THEATER OWNER

Coroner Nance yesterday ordered an autopsy on the body of Joseph L. Carr, 60 years of age, proprietor of the Montrose Theater in Montrose, who died late Friday under circumstances which led Sheriff's office investigators to believe he took his own life. Inability of the investigators to determine the method by which he came to his death resulted in the autopsy being ordered. Carr was found on the floor of a washroom of the theater. An overturned tumbler was found in the washbowl and on the body a note addressed to Carr's wife, Mrs. Shirley M. Carr, in which the theater man blamed himself as a failure and gave directions regarding his body and the future conduct of his business.

RAIL LINE ACCUSED IN $100,000 DAMAGE SUIT

Suit for $100,000 damages was brought against the Los Angeles Railway Company yesterday by Mrs. Maud T. Jones who asked that $50,000 of the total be awarded her as compensation for having been called "an old bum" by W. L. Borsch, conductor, when she boarded one of the company's cars. The other $50,000 is asked for injuries to her back she professes to have suffered when, after boarding the car, it jerked so suddenly she was thrown heavily against a guard rail.

AIR STUDENTS WILL COMPETE

Aircraft League's Honor Pupils to Meet

Medals and Trophies to be Awarded Saturday

New Records for Miniature Planes Expected

One hundred honor students from the Los Angeles Times Playground Aircraft League will compete for medals and other trophies Saturday at 10 a.m. on the Los Angeles Junior College Athletic Field, 855 North Vendome avenue. Among this group are several of America's best miniature airplane model builders, and with favorable weather conditions additional world's records may possibly be established by these boys.

The program Saturday culminates eight and one-half months' study of junior aeronautics conducted on the forty-two playgrounds under the direction of John H. Henderson and Louis Orsatti of the playground department, in co-operation with the Los Angeles Times, in which more than 6000 boys have received instruction in the making and flying of miniature aircraft.

CONTEST PROGRAM

In addition to the flights for records will be the spectacular exhibition of miniature planes which will lay miniature smoke screens and drop parachutes.

Seating arrangements for the public have been made. Aeronautical celebrities of Southern California will attend and act as judges.

The program will be divided into four classes:

(1.) Glider for distance, open competition.

(2.) Stick (scientific) model for duration of flight. (Juniors under 16 and seniors over 16 divisions.)

(3.) Fuselage model for duration of flight. (Optional launching, junior and senior classes.)

(4.) Exhibition flying—(a) May include a parachute release. (b) Smoke screen (smoke cartridges will be furnished contestants.) (c) Any other novel performance of interest to spectators and acceptable to contest judges. Fuselage models only; open competition.

CONTEST RULES

(a) Models entered in events Nos. 1 and 2 must have a main wing area of at least 125 square inches and weigh at least one ounce for every fifty square inches of surface.

(b) Models entered in event No. 4 may have unlimited wing area but must weigh at least three ounces and be of two-color scheme in finish.

(c) All gliders to weigh under three ounces.

(d) Each contestant to be allowed two flights only in events No. 1, 2 and 3. Winning contestant of each event to be given three additional flights in effort to set a national record. Upon calling his name, contestant will be given two minutes to launch his model (stop watch time.) Failure to do this will constitute a delayed flight; two delayed flights will constitute one official flight.

ACTION ON AIRPORT FOR CITY URGED

Chamber Manager Says Aeronautical Progress Being Held Back

Voicing the conviction of Chamber of Commerce directors that the aeronautical development of the Los Angeles area is contingent upon the early acquisition of a municipally owned airport, Secretary-Manager Arnoll yesterday wrote the City Council urging definite action toward acquiring such a site.

Without this airport, Arnoll declared, it is impossible for the city "to go out energetically to secure some great developments in aviation that will have much to do with the future of air transportation and industry here." Plans are now being considered for a commercial dirigible service from the Pacific Coast to the Hawaiian Islands, he said, and Los Angeles will be in no position to bid for the terminal of the proposed line unless the airport question is settled.

Lack of a locally owned airport caused this city to lose the Goodyear navy dirigible plant in 1928, Arnoll pointed out, owing to the company's refusal to locate their facilities on a leased airport. This same attitude, he said, is held by many large manufacturing plants that can be located on or adjacent to a municipally owned airport.

Mary Lewis, Opera Singer, Asks Divorce

The separate-maintenance action of Mrs. Mary Bohnen, known on the operatic stage as Mary Lewis, begun against Michael Bohnen, opera singer, last summer, blossomed into a divorce suit yesterday, as Mrs. Bohnen filed a complaint against her husband, charging desertion.

In her separate-maintenance complaint, which was dismissed after a property settlement, Mrs. Bohnen asserted that her husband treated her cruelly, threatening to jump from a hotel window in New York and in Paris, Berlin and Los Angeles, beating her with his fists.

LASKY ASKS PERMIT TO CONSTRUCT PIER

A request for permission to construct a $40,000 landing pier in front of his beach home at 699 Palisades Beach Road, Santa Monica, has been filed informally with the Santa Monica City Council for Jesse L. Lasky, producer of motion pictures. The pier is to be used as a landing for the film magnate's yacht, and one feature mentioned is a glassed-in porch. The pier would extend 750 feet into the ocean.

Meadows Case Appeal Ready

Appeal of George (Rush) Meadows, former University of Southern California football star, from conviction on eleven counts of grand larceny stood ready for formal submission by the District Court of Appeal yesterday, following the filing of Meadows's final brief.

Meadows served a term in Fort Leavenworth for having stolen bonds in his possession. Following his release, he was asserted to have obtained money from parents of John R. Osborne, cemetery promoter, on representations that he could obtain a pardon for Osborne, then in the Federal prison.

In his brief to the Appellate Court, Meadows asserted that he was convicted on insufficient evidence.

Affairs of the Week
by Juana Neal Levy

Summer in Southern California as well as everywhere else calls a out-of-doors, affairs al fresco being in vogue, while weddings are ng arranged in lovely gardens and visitors entertained at picnics and ...on parties.

Mr. and Mrs. Everett Russell ..., whose wedding was an event ...t All Saints' Church, Pasadena, ...day evening, are enjoying a de...ful honeymoon cruising in the ...ific Northwest and planning to ...n to Santa Barbara in time ...end the annual fiesta. The ...riage of Miss Louise Adams ..., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. ...ge E. Hooper of Madison ave..., Pasadena, to Everett Russell Smith, son of Dr. Rae Smith of Los Angeles and Mrs. Georgia Knight-Smith of Paris, France, was an outstanding social event of the past week, the reception and wedding dinner in the Crystal ballroom of the Huntington, to which 150 guests were bidden, following the ceremony.

Miss Mollie Hooper assisted her sister as maid of honor, while the bridesmaids included Misses Marian Ford and Miss Eleanor Salisbury of Pasadena, Miss Martha Marsh, Miss Frances Rich, Miss Sallie Offut and Miss Helen Chandler of Los Angeles and Miss Gertrude Chase of Santa Barbara, bridesmaids. Gordon Smith served his brother as best man and William James, Robert Cavanaugh, Robert Triest and Dan Chandler of Los Angeles, Tito Bianci of San Francisco, Francis Wood of Spencer, Idaho, and Duncan Hooper of Pasadena, ushered.

The maid of honor wore blue chiffon and carried yellow roses, while the bridesmaids were all in pale yellow chiffon and carried yellow roses and blue delphinium, all wearing hat, shoes and hose to match their frocks.

One of the lovely brides who is being charmingly welcomed at Fort MacArthur is Mrs. Joseph Henry Twyman, Jr. (Bernell Clyde Poole) who was married in June to Lieut. Twyman, U.S.A., in the Catholic chapel of West Point, following the bridegroom's being graduated. The wedding was a strictly military affair with brother officers of the bridegroom forming the customary archway of swords through which the bridal party passed from the chapel. Miss Theresa Poole assisted her sister as maid of honor, and Misses Helen Virginia Twyman, Phillis Peelor, Lois and Eileen Randall were bridesmaids.

Given in marriage by her father, B. C. Poole, district quartermaster in the Canal Zone, the bride was charming in a gown of white satin and duchesse lace with veil of tulle caught to a quaint cap and fastened at either side with small clusters of flowers, while she carried an arm shower of bride's roses.

The bride's attendants were all in frocks of silk net in pastel shades with tulle hats and carried armfuls of blossoms to harmonize with their gowns.

Lieut. Boyd served his brother officer as best man, having been his classmate and roommate at West Point. Ushers included Lieut. George Duehring, Lieut. John Hayden, Cadet Francis Neelon and Cadet B. T. Harris.

Mrs. Joseph H. Twyman, mother of the bridegroom and wife of Capt. Twyman, U.S.A., of Fort MacArthur, motored to West Point with her two daughters, Miss Helen Virginia Twyman and Miss Ruth Twyman, for the commencement and to attend the wedding.

After a wedding trip to New York, Lieut. and Mrs. Twyman accompanied his mother and sisters to this Coast and they are now at home at the Twyman quarters in the post until September, when they will sail for the Philippines, where Lieut. Twyman has been ordered for duty with the Coast Artillery.

Capt. and Mrs. Twyman entertained with a charmingly appointed tea at their quarters several days ago to introduce formally their son and his bride to their many service and civilian friends. Garden flowers in profusion were used and bright hued tapers made a gay setting for the tea table and rooms.

Presiding at the tea tables were Mrs. Olney Place, wife of Col. Place, U.S.A. (retired) of Los Angeles, and Mrs. Carr W. Waller, wife of Lieut.-Col. Waller of Fort MacArthur. A group of the younger set assisted in serving and many friends from Los Angeles, Hollywood, Pasadena and Santa Monica motored down during the afternoon.

Seventy-five invitations were issued for the wedding in Long Beach of Miss Dorothy Dell Hart of Long Beach and Lieut. Daniel Byrd Miller, U.S.N., the ceremony taking place at the harbor the 12th inst.

Sprays of white larkspur and palms made an exquisite decoration for the church and tall cathedral candelabra burned upon the altar, where Rev. Perry G. M. Austin officiated.

The bride was charming in an afternoon frock of pale beige chiffon with a deep lace yoke and lace cuffs on the long sleeves. The skirt was bouffant, trailing gracefully. A broad-brimmed hat of horsehair trimmed with velvet to match the gown, and green slippers, completed the dainty costume of the bride, who carried Talisman roses and lilies of the valley.

Miss Electa Thomas of San Francisco, the bride's only attendant, was in blue lace with matching slippers and hat of tulle. She carried pink rosebuds and pansies.

Lieut. Claud Haman, naval aviator stationed at North Island, and a classmate of the bridegroom, was best man.

Following the service the bridal party, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Harms, motored to the Biltmore for the wedding dinner.

Mrs. Miller has been unusually popular in the young service set and the announcement of the approaching marriage was the incentive for many prenuptial social courtesies.

Lieut. Miller, who was graduated from Annapolis, class of 1926, has been aboard the U.S.S. Saratoga, but has received orders to the destroyer Alden, and with his bride is at home to their many friends at 440 C street, Coronado.

Miss Electa Thomas, prominent in social circles of San Francisco, came south early in July to be the

During her sojourn Miss Thomas has visited in Los Angeles and Pasadena and enjoyed a continual round of gay younger-set social affairs.

Prominent in both the army and navy activities at the harbor is Miss Helen Virginia Twyman, attractive daughter of Capt. and Mrs. Joseph Henry Twyman of Fort MacArthur. Miss Twyman motored with her mother and sister, Miss Ruth Twyman, to West Point in June to attend the commencement exercises, join in June week festivities and attend the wedding of her brother, Lieut. One of the widely feted visitors in the service colony is Miss Mary Louise James, house guest of her brother and sister-in-law, Capt. and Mrs. William C. James of the United States Marine Corps, the former stationed aboard the U.S.S. Tennessee.

Soon after her arrival Miss James was honor guest at a smart luncheon and bridge at the Pacific Coast Club, Long Beach, with which Mrs. James entertained for her guest. Covers were marked for fourteen service and civilian friends and included among the out-of-town guests Mrs. William Prengen of Glendale.

Tilt-Bryant

The marriage of Miss Judith Tilt, charming daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Tilt of Pasadena, to Ernest Albert Bryant, Jr., son of Dr. and Mrs. E. A. Bryant of West Adams street, was solemnized yesterday afternoon, the ceremony taking place at 5:30 o'clock at the Tilt home in Bradford street with Dr. Leslie Learned of All Saints' Church officiating, in the presence of the immediate relatives and a few close friends.

The decorations of the house were charmingly carried out with a profusion of flowers and foliage, while blossoms and ferns forming the improvised altar erected in the drawing-room, while through the other rooms dahlias in gorgeous colors predominated.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a becoming gown of cream satin, the veil of tulle being held in place by sprays of orange blossoms. She carried an armful of lilies of the valley.

Miss Louise Macy was maid of honor in a frock of periwinkle blue chiffon, with tulle hat in leghorn shade and great rose and foliage at the crown. Mrs. Tilt, matron of honor, wore a frock of peach chiffon with hat of leghorn shades of tulle and rose on the crown. Both carried armsful of summer flowers to harmonize with their frocks. Albert Parker served as best man and Richard Dakin and Ned Tilt ushered.

Mrs. Tilt received her guests in a gown of black and white printed chiffon, while Mrs. Bryant was in peach chiffon and Mrs. Richard Dakin (Susanna Bryant) also wore printed chiffon.

Mr. and Mrs. Bryant left after the wedding supper for their honeymoon trip, destination not revealed. After August 1 the couple will take up their residence on the Bryant rancho near Long Beach.

Both The Bachelors and The Spinsters are losing two of their most prominent members, with this wedding, as marriage automatically cancels membership in both organizations.

Informal Supper

Honoring Mr. and Mrs. Richard Crooks, a charmingly appointed informal buffet supper was given Friday evening by Mr. and Mrs. George Benjamin Hull at their home in Beverly Hills, the supper following the Hollywood Bowl concert, where Mr. Crooks was soloist. One hundred guests were bidden, and Mr. and Mrs. Hull, who are passing the summer in their beach home at Malibu, motored up Thursday, returning to the beach yesterday.

Miss Marguerite Creitenbach, maid of honor, wore pale orchid tulle and carried pale pink roses. Carl Lundquist served as best man. A reception and supper followed the ceremony, after which Mr. and Mrs. Egge left for San Francisco on their wedding trip and will make their home here after their return.

Mrs. Willis received her guests in a gown of pale green chiffon. Mrs. Egge was graduated from Oakland City College, while Mr. Egge claims Loyola law college as his alma mater.

Wedding Announced

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Breakenridge Templeton of Hinsdale, Ill., announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Constance Templeton, to Frederick William Rhinelander II, son of Rev. and Mrs. Philip Mercer Rhinelander of New York and Washington, D. C., the ceremony taking place the 15th inst. at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York City, with Rev. Rhinelander officiating. Immediately following the ceremony the couple sailed for England for their honeymoon.

The marriage culminates a romance of a decided academic tinge, as the bride and Mr. Rhinelander, both of an exceptionally studious turn of mind, have known each other for several years.

The bride attended the National Cathedral School for Girls in Washington, D. C., while Mr. Rhinelander was a student at the National Cathedral School for Boys. Then she studied four years at Radcliffe, while he went through Harvard. There followed more studies at Oxford, Eng., for both of them, and they plan to go right on pursuing degrees.

Something totally new in coolness. Dainty pastels to match your frocks.

Here indeed is a clever first-aid to hot weather chic—A stepin so light it feels like a handkerchief, and so cool it's like being wrapped in a cloud—but it moulds the figure as thoroughly as any heavier garment. Their patrician smartness is accomplished by a combination of cool fine linen and a coarse open silk elastic mesh. Their pastel colors of Baby Blue, Pink, Peach and White can be tubbed in a jiffy and they do not fade in the process. Note the clever rick-rack braid edging—Women's and misses' sizes. $5.00.

Increase Skin Beauty With Mercolized Wax

Fashion says 1930 complexions should be clear and white. To quickly restore the youthful loveliness of your skin we suggest the daily use of pure Mercolized Wax. It flecks off the film of blemished surface skin in tiny invisible particles. All beauty-marring imperfections such as freckles, tan, blackheads, dry or reddened skin disappear. The beautiful under skin then revealed is velvety-smooth, soft and flawless. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty. Smooth away wrinkles and other age-signs with this astringent: 1 ounce Powdered Saxolite dissolved in 1-half pint witch hazel. At all drug stores.—[Advertisement.]

OPERA STAR TO APPEAR IN 'DIXIANA'

Everett Marshall Will Make Initial Film Bow Tuesday

BY ISABEL MORSE JONES

When "Dixiana" has its premiere next Tuesday night at the Orpheum, a personable young opera star will make his bow before the talking-picture public. He is Everett Marshall, late of the Metropolitan Grand Opera Company of New York and more recently a popular member of the R.-K.-O. movie set. He admits he is more interested in the perfection of that bow than he was over his first appearance at the "Met."

Marshall is one of those Mayflower Americans. Born in Massachusetts in a family with background so deep that it includes the Puritans, blessed with looks, an affable manner and a self-appraising intelligence educated by New England and European teachers, he has found the past winter in Hollywood "fascinatingly different." He says so himself.

He dropped his career as a rising young concert singer in New York to come to the R.-K.-O. studios on a day's notice. His singing and acting experience as leading man in "Dixiana," has been fun. There have been so many harder things in his life. One doesn't go through the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, work three years with Cadore in Italy and O'Neil in London, make one's opera debut in Europe and then jump to a three years' contract at the Metropolitan, without some grilling.

Learning new roles in a short time is just every-day activity for Marshall. He sang in "The King's Henchman," "Pagliacci" "Lohengrin," "The Girl of the Golden West" and "Fra Ghirardo" during his engagement at the Metropolitan and kept up a concert repertoire.

The theater, except for grand opera, is a new field for Marshall but he takes to it. He has a charming personality which could easily be converted into a matinee hero type, in case the success of his picture indicates that future for him. He has a pleasant shyness and lack of conceit, doubtless created by the fact that he has done bigger things than Hollywood requires of him.

It makes him very popular with the ladies of the West and doesn't injure his rating with the executives. In other words he is rather a novelty, being of Massachusetts stock, a shade diffident, a little sentimental in his love-making on the stage and not puffed up over having conquered other territory in the amusement world.

Mr. Marshall is to make "Heart of the Rockies" at R.-K.-O. next and he doesn't contemplate a return to New York opera for some time. He doesn't agree with certain other stars that opera days are over, however.

MOVIE TEAMS DISAPPEAR

...y Picture Partnerships Have Faded Out Since New Studio Policy Became Effective

BY ELENA SOLAND

... was left himself is the cry which may be heard about the ... as the actor can raise his voice. This is in no sense a ... tradition. Rather it is an outcry of the reborn propaganda, in ... once again, promoting "the play's the thing." For it used to ... teamwork was a sporting route to fame. The teaming of certain ... players, it may be remembered, always insured a boxoffice on...

... But out of the general uprooting and weeding-out that still follow the triumph of the talkies there do remain teams. Marie Dressler and Polly Moran are an excellent example. There are the four Marx brothers whose cinematic debut last year, "The Cocoanuts," brought in the second largest receipts of the season. They are to follow up that success with their approaching "Animal Crackers."

Up from vaudeville came Van and Schenck with one picture, Moran and Mack with two, Olsen and Johnson, Amos and Andy. Fox has just signed the Keating sisters from Broadway to appear in "Hot Numbers;" not to mention the new team of Black and Blue, a blackface duo. This is a combination of Robert Burns and John Swor, one of the original Black Crows. They will be seen in "Up the River," a prison story.

LIST RUNS ON

Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey recently came out in "The Cuckoos." Laurel and Hardy, or so it looks now, will probably go on forever. And who would want to discourage them?

Ruth Chatterton and Clive Brook teamed it for a spell in "The Laughing Lady" and "Anybody's Woman." And it seems they would repeat their association. Also the Edmund Lowe-Victor McLaglen cooperative masculinity afford an occasional attraction. "What Price Glory?" and "The Cock - Eyed World" are promised a future sequel.

And in a field by themselves Alexander Gray and Bernice Claire, previously associated on the musical stage, appear to find it more than agreeable to run up and down the scale in unison and in microphonic operettas on the larger scale.

GOAL OF TALKIE GOLD REVEALED

"Hell's Angels" $4,000,000 Traced to Tills

Unusually Large Sum Spent Arouses Curiosity

Zeppelin Scene Alone Cost Almost $500,000

In response to inquiries as to how $4,000,000 could be spent in the making of one motion picture, Sid Grauman, following conferences with Howard Hughes, the producer, has just issued an itemized statement of the expenditures in filming "Hell's Angels," now at Grauman's Chinese.

The total amount spent on the negative and the developing of 2,254,750 feet of film used in the production was $225,475. The cost of the flying sequences, exclusive of film cost, was $2,113,000, divided into $562,000 spent for planes bought outright and reconditioned; $754,000 for flyers' and players' salaries; $389,000 for plane and location rentals, and $468,000 as salaries of cameramen, cutters, technicians and others.

The aggregate sum expended on dramatic or inferior sequences was $1,068,000, apportioned to the cost of building sets and creating costumes, $520,000; salaries of players, $328,000, and salaries of cameramen, directors, cutters, technicians and others, $220,000.

The portion of the spectacle depicting a Zeppelin raid on London, alone cost $460,000. This expenditure was made for the equipment, locations and salaries of the small army of men employed.

These items represent a grand total of $3,866,475. When the cost of cutting, sound "dubbing," trailers for advertising in other theaters, exploitation and advertising for the finished production are added to this sum, the final aggregate will be found to be well in excess of $4,000,000, according to Grauman.

CURTAIN FALLS ON BOARDS

Morosco, Once Known as "Cradle for Actors," Soon to Become City's First Newsreel Theater

BY M. B.

Known in its heyday as a "cradle for actors," the old Morosco Theater, more recently the President, will become a motion-picture playhouse within the next thirty days.

The theater, built eighteen years ago for Oliver Morosco, and the scene of many triumphal first nights has been leased to Fox West Coast Theaters to become Los Angeles' first newsreel theater. In the next few days, workmen will enter the old building for the purpose of refurbishing and repolishing its dusty interior, perhaps to tear out its old-fashioned boxes and to install sound-picture projection equipment.

MANY PLAYS LAUNCHED

Many have been the plays launched on its stage, many the actor started on a career that has led, frequently, to great success on the New York boards, and, in not a few cases, fame in pictures. Charley Ruggles played there opposite Kitty Gordon. Kitty Doner first attracted attention here as a youngster in one of Billy Rock's shows.

"Able's Irish Rose," "Civilian Clothes," "So Long Letty," "Upstairs and Down," plays which went on from Los Angeles to New York to attain reputations as distinct hits were all premiered at the Morosco. Kolb and Dill also trod the famous stage.

Edmund Lowe, Richard Dix, Douglas MacLean, Warner Baxter, Bertha Mann, Roberta Arnold, Walter Catlett are among the actors and actresses who won their first success there.

WON SUCCESS

Nat Goodwin played the Morosco in "Oliver Twist," Al Jolson in "Dancin' Around," Charles Winniger and Blanche Ring (married to one each other at that time) were seen in "Nobody Home."

"So Long Letty" had in its cast—the same cast which later went east—Charlotte Greenwood, May Boley, Walter Catlett and Sydney Grant.

Gavin Gordon, with Greta Garbo now in "Romance" at Loew's State, was leading man to Charlotte Treadway, later—much later—on.

In "Civilian Clothes" were Eleanor Woodruff, Louise Calhern, Clyde Fillmore, Thurston Hall and Helene Sullivan. Roberta Arnold scored in "Upstairs and Down." Edmund Lowe and Maude Fulton brought "The Brat" to Los Angeles playgoers. Leo Carrillo and Warner Baxter were both in "Lombardi, Ltd.," Bertha Mann (now Mrs. Raymond Griffith) played "Romance." Grace Valentine, Wyndham Standing, Lloyd Corrigan, Ida St. Leon are among other names which once were in the theater marquee.

MORE CONVENTIONAL

When the Morosco was first built, it was pretty hard to get people into the habit of going so far uptown to the theater. They persisted in attending the Burbank, which they declared, was more "convenient." The Morosco's days of success really began with "So Long Letty" in 1915.

At that time many of the theaters, particularly the Majestic and Mason, used to house grand opera. The Morosco never did.

Under the Fox-West Coast regime, it will show only newsreels. Programs will run about fifty minutes and will change as fast as new shots of important international, national and local events arrive. It will bear the title, "Newsreel Theater."

YOUNG DOUGLAS SCORES

Youthful American Actor Returns from English Exile to Appear in Fata Morgana

BY E. B. L.

An expatriate returns! Determined to win the praise of his countrymen! From a seven-year exile comes Tom Douglas, the youngest star on the London stage, to appear for the first time in an American theater.

It was last year that Douglas was brought back to his native land to co-star with Dorothy Gish in a sparkling something called "Young Love."

Fresh from that, Douglas arrived in Hollywood where he was literally cheered on the opening night of "Fata Morgana" at the Hollywood Playhouse. It is the ambition of this ingenuous young man to create, if he can, a place for himself in his own country. Opportunity is already coming to him in a big way and he is as surprised as he is encouraged.

"IN CONFERENCE"

"Yes, they must have come to the opening last night because this morning some of the producers phoned me and I have been out at the studios—'in conference,' I suppose—all day. They seem to like me. It seems wonderful, all in one day."

All the plays written to youth have served Tom Douglas. At seventeen he played "Merton of the Movies," which forever gave him a loyal public. John Van Druten wrote "Young Woodley" for him. Then there were "Fata Morgana" and "The American Tragedy." And of them all he sets forth George, the boy in "Fata Morgana," as being the part best written and most inspirational.

LINES WERE RIGHT

"The lines are so right, the moods so utterly true. I haven't found a false note anywhere. There is 'Young Woodley,' a fine play, but one written after seeing 'Fata Morgana.' Woodley is really George in a different country and a different environment."

Another ambition, a bit more personal but equally strong, spurs Douglas onward and upward. He will not be known as the perpetual juvenile. It is his aim to drift gracefully into light comedy, at the first signs of maturity, and revel in subtle shadings.

"I like comedy," he says. "I'd much rather be funny than pathetic. And I like the English humor and they have it, believe it or not. Plenty of it. But the Englishman is subtle. That is why his comedies do not go over in this country. And the American is broad. He liker falls and pointed laughs. The one doesn't appreciate the other, but both are funny."

ENGLISH BACKGROUND

His English background is a culture Tom Douglas would not give up. For one thing, it taught him an admiration for the sincere artistry that can belong to the theater, when its public regards it seriously. His teacher was one of the founders of the famous Moscow Art Theater and gave him a never-to-be-forgotten schooling in the actor's art of fine repression.

But there is something which America has already taught Douglas. And that is to be constantly alert.

"In England if one is a success in one role his public always remains loyal. If in other plays he is not so fine, his audience forgives. It makes an actor careless. The American public, on the other hand, is unforgiving and always expectant. You win its approval. Fine. But watch out, for the next time you must be that much better or you are forgotten."

Amateur Burglar Comes Back

Ronald Colman Is the New Raffles

In the talking picture of that name, due Wednesday at the United Artists' Theater. Kay Francis is prominent in his support.

BELOVED CRACKSMAN OF NINETIES HAS RETURNED

BY ALMA WHITAKER

"Raffles" was a gentlemanly burglar, beloved of the flappers of the nineties as their pet fiction hero. Now he is being impersonated by an adored screen hero, Ronald Colman, at United Artists.

Ronald has just returned from a trip to his own England, accompanied by Ernest and Elsie Torrence and William Powell. "Only a little of London, mostly the west of England," smiles our hero, who was himself a country boy in the long ago.

"There is a great to-do over there about development of the picture industry, probably in co-operation with the American," said Colman, who was not able to quite shed his screen interests, even on holiday.

"Raffles" is Ronald Colman's third talkie. "I was glad to break into comedy with 'Bulldog Drummond,'" he says, "and even 'Condemned' had its lighter moments. 'Raffles' is good comedy, too. I am enjoying myself in the talkies, even if they are harder work. We take so much more time on preparation now. So that although I am only in two pictures a year, I'm not loafing at all."

Frederick Lonsdale, England's gay comedy playwright, will arrive in Hollywood this week. "The Last of Mrs. Cheney" was one of his. "He has written a screen story specially for me," brags Ronald, "his first attempt at screen writing. We haven't named it yet, but it's good. We start work directly he arrives."

This Ronald Colman remains something of an enigma to his admirers. In all the reams that have been written about him, precious little has ever been divulged. Ronald is essentially a man of mysterious reticences. But this time, England has loosened his tongue a trifle, so that we discovered he was educated in a country school, was very bright at mathematics and quite dumb in history and geography . . . "Two subjects that have since become fascinating," smiles Ronald, "while I have discarded the mathematics."

All the same the mathematics served him for six years, for he was an accountant in a shipping firm until the war broke out. Ronald enlisted on the first day, saw front trench service, was wounded and 'round about 1918 met Lena Ashwell, the English actress who gave him his first role in a sketch at the Coliseum. But he had loved private theatricals before that. He made an almost instant hit for a spell. "And then I slumped just long enough to keep me from getting vain." So he was all set to be "discovered" by Samuel Goldwyn. His first two pictures were with Lillian Gish, "Romola" and "The White Sister," both made in Italy.

APPEARANCE RECORD LONG

Number of Hollywood Players Who Have Had Roles in 200 Pictures Is Lengthy

BY PHILIP K. SCHEUER

Who holds the record total for motion-picture appearances?

Perhaps the rooster who crows now as the Pathe trade mark, or Leo, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lion. More likely it is some obscure character actor who awakens a slight memory in your mind when you see him, who causes you to mutter, "Oh, there's what's-his-name again." You have probably been looking at him—off and on, of course, nobody would want to look at a character actor continuously—since he played the be-whiskered sheriff in 1903 for Edison, but he's still what's-his-name to you, and he always will be.

The reason he is just a what's-his-name is because, after ten, twenty or thirty years, he is still fascinated with "the game." Acting is all he knows, and it's "got" him. Perhaps he was featured once upon a time; perhaps he was even a star. And now he's extra-ing. Well, it's just "the breaks." "There was a director out at First National said he's got a 'bit' for me in his next; I got lines to speak, too." And so it goes.

SOME OLD-TIMERS

But among the stars and featured players, there are a few who started when the industry was in its infancy (I heard that remark)—when the industry was in its infancy, and they have continued with hardly a break through successive changes—full-length features and talkies. But because they played in perhaps fifty short reelers a year then, and now consider themselves overworked if they turn out one full-fledged feature in the same period, the totals of many of the potential leaders are rather less than you might expect.

From available sources, one gathers that Jack Mulhall heads the list among those still going strong, with a total of 300 pictures to his, it may be granted credit. Bebe Daniels's claim is 288. Betty Compson has kept count up to 219 and one may safely include, above the 200-mark, Norma Talmadge and Mary Pickford.

IN THREE HUNDRED CLASS

There are, of course, supporting players who can justly say their totals are higher than these. An instance is that furnished by Guy Oliver, who has proudly toiled off the figures at the Paramount studio through the years, 325 times. Farrell MacDonald, who can remember 146 parts, has probably played twice that many. And there are a dozen more.

Returning to the electric-light category, the harassed publicity gentlemen in Hollywood's major studios have tracked various and sundry actors to the lair, extracting from them this general list in the 40-100 picture class: Ninety, H. B. Warner; eighty, George Marion, Edmund Breese; seventy, Milton Sills, Edmund Lowe; sixty, Evelyn Brent, Harry Gribbon and Louise Fazenda; fifty, Viola Dana, Shirley Mason, Clara Bow, Richard Dix and Conrad Nagel; forty, Bessie Love, Wallace Beery, Richard Barthelmess, Harry Carey, Lila Lee and Charles Ray.

From the same eagle-eyed sleuths emanate the following totals in the thirties: Clive Brook, thirty-one; William Powell, thirty-eight; Mary Brian, thirty-five; Warner Baxter, thirty-eight; John Gilbert, thirty-one; William Haines, thirty-three; Clyde Cook, thirty-two; Edward Horton, thirty-five; Pauline Frederick, thirty-four; Corinne Griffith, thirty-nine (since 1918;) Jack Holt, thirty; Carmel Myers, thirty; Constance Talmadge, thirty-eight; Mae Murray, thirty; Mary Miles Minter, thirty-seven; Thomas Meighan, thirty-three.

Mention of Meighan recalls numberless older favorites whose totals ran high, but are inexact.

MIX HAS A RECORD

One estimate places Tom Mix's figure as high as 400. In his case, as, in so many others, the short subjects contribute materially to the amount. Harold Lloyd is an extreme example of a star who, appearing almost monthly in two-reelers of the early days, suddenly shifted to the one-a-year class. Mulhall, who heads the list, has an average of eighteen pictures a year since 1913.

Studio figures on other favorites run as follows: Richard Arlen, twenty-six; William Austin, twenty-two; Neil Hamilton, twenty-nine; Esther Ralston, twenty-seven; Charles Farrell, twenty-three; Norma Shearer, twenty-five; Lon Chaney, twenty-six (leads;) Louise Dresser, twenty-four; Polly Moran, twenty-six; Belle Bennett, twenty-five; Enid Bennett, twenty-three; William Farnum, twenty-nine; Gloria Swanson, twenty-eight (features;) Will Rogers, sixteen (features;) George O'Brien, seventeen; Dolores Del Rio, fourteen; Douglas Fairbanks, twenty-two; Marie Dressler, thirteen; and Ramon Novarro, eighteen.

Practically everybody in the country gets in under the fence in the score of 10-1. I once walked into a scene inadvertently myself.

INGENUITY NEEDED TO TAX MOVIES

County Assessor Gives Some Facts Concerning Film Assessments

The business office of the motion-picture studio gets the "breaks" in this inside story of what stars, stories, costumes, sets and props are worth in the eyes of Ed W. Hopkins, County Assessor, who has just completed the assessment roll for 1930 and has listed more than $30,000,0000, including solvent credits, in film valuations.

The assessed value of the entire industry in 1925 was $1,500,000. This year it amounts to about $15,500,000 on personal property, not counting book accounts, and so much widely scattered real estate that it is difficult to ascertain an accurate total.

Even talk is taxed, be it known, for the assessment is based on production costs taken from their book statements, when it is possible to do so, Hopkins reveals, and consideration is given for faulty direction, temperamental stars, weather hazards and a miscellany of reasons for out-of-pocket losses by the producers. However, claims are not encouraged and the Assessor's office makes an appraisal of its own when it is found that studio management is lax in listing property.

It is interesting to know how a tax is collected at all on much of the production "on ice," which can be shipped out of State prior to the first Monday in March, when the assessment season begins. This actually happened until the Motion-Picture Producers' Association agreed that their members would not think about the "tax date," as they called it when formerly loading up carloads of completed film for shipment to places outside California. They did what all others would do unless their transitory property was to be treated fairly.

Take, for instance, the assessment of continuities, which includes story, scenario, script, titles, etc. They are almost worthless property, having to be redone so many times that the original idea has dwindled to only a title.

The Assessor, who has specially trained deputies working on the studio equipment appraisals, says that props and costumes must be assessed quite low because most of them are never used again. Sets and flats sometimes can be used again by rebuilding. Much of the rented electrical equipment is assessed to concerns outside of the immediate industry which accounts for the comparatively small assessed valuation as a whole.

Practically all sound devices, with the exception of those used by three of the smaller producers, are assessed to the Electrical Research Products Company which retains ownership and leases the equipment to the producers. Most Technicolor work is done in Boston, the Assessor has found, but with increases in that company's local plant which will bring new values and employment to the film capital.

Rim o' World Bowl Ready

Nestled in the woodlands of Crestline Village, in the San Bernardino Mountains, is the new Rim o' the World Bowl, which is to be the scene of musical and theatrical entertainment. Its building is due to the effort of Mr. Charles S. Mann.

It is expected that the bowl will be completed and that the dedicatory program will be given about August 1. Well-formulated plans provide for the presentation of the better class light operas, dramas, comedy dramas, music, recitals, lectures, and the kind, as well as divine services of an interdenominational character each Sunday.

CAST INCLUDES FAVORITES

Array of Talent Assembled for Musical Farce Known for Work in Previous "Hits"

The cast of "Oh, Judge," new musical farce opening at the Vine Street Theater on Tuesday night, under the direction of Strong and Wilson, includes several stage favorites.

Bernard Granville, comedian of the Ziegfeld Follies, "Castles in the Air," "No, No, Nanette" and other Broadway pieces, tops the array of talent in his role as manager of a modernistic health farm where night court prisoners are sentenced to reform.

Mary Hutchinson, youthful ingenue, is another in the cast.

Marie Wells, California's own prima donna, returns to the footlights in "Oh, Judge," in a part which suits her vivid personality and provides her with tuneful songs.

Rodney McLennan, juvenile with Marilyn Miller in Florenz Ziegfeld's production of "Rosalie" in New York, is another Coast defender. Paisley Noon, former dancing partner of Gertrude Hoffman in Shubert's Winter Garden revues, and in Orpheum vaudeville, is also remembered here.

An outstanding highlight of "Oh, Judge" will be the dancing chorus of Hollywood beauties.

The book is by Edward Elsner, George Bowles and Gwen Meredith, with lyrics by the latter. Lucian Denni, composer of "Happy Go Lucky" and other musical shows, provided the score of eighteen numbers. Edward Elsner directed the book and Eddie Prinz staged the dances and ensembles.

ARTIFICIALITY, FILM SIN

Entertaining Realism Need of Audible Drama, Opines Frank Lloyd, Veteran Director

BY JOHN SCOTT

Most motion-picture plots, like popular songs, flash once, then lose their luster and are carefully packed away on the spacious shelves of the distributing companies to collect the dust of the years. There are exceptions, perhaps just to prove the rule. One is "The Sin Flood," which Frank Lloyd directed for Goldwyn Pictures a decade ago, less one year.

Now this dramatic vehicle has been renovated, refurbished and adapted to the talking screen—and by the same guiding hand, only this time for First National. It has also been endowed with a new title, "The Way of All Men."

"The Sin Flood" is remembered as a powerful piece of drama, telling as it does the story of eight men and a girl trapped in a Mississippi River town saloon by a flood. The intense situation and the character study presented as each member forgives his enemies and prepares to die will be recalled by those who saw the picture in 1921.

The question of whether the vehicle is strengthened with the addition of sound and dialogue at once presents itself. In Frank Lloyd's opinion it is, definitely.

CHARACTERS' THOUGHTS

"In the first place, we are able to tell in the dialogue exactly what each character is thinking," Lloyd said. "All the silent film had, besides the pantomime, were subtitles, which of necessity had to be short and which could not sufficiently establish just what we wanted the audience to feel. The pantomime, then, carried the whole burden.

The problem of selecting types confronted Lloyd when he began operations on the picture. It was made doubly hard because of the new medium. The characters must not only look their parts, but must fulfill the speaking requirements. Lloyd wanted no stars, he declared, but he insisted on finding the right person for each part. The cast he picked for "The Way of All Men," now on view at Warner's Hollywood Theater, is composed of Dorothy Revier, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., Noah Beery, Robert Edeson, Anders Randolf, Ivan Simpson, Henry Kolker, Wade Boeteler and others. No stars but all-star.

Lloyd is a stickler for realism. Those who remember "The Sea Hawk," "Drag," "Son of the Gods" and others will bear witness to this fact. His pictures must mirror life, he says, and particularly human nature.

"To me artificiality is the sin of motion pictures. We must recognize the fact that certain classes of people like to be raised above their work a day position in life through the cinema, but the elevating process, if it can be called such, must smack of that which is real. I do believe that when persons watching a film feel that through the story they have lived the situations, the object of film production is reached. This process must not be too bald; it must not force persons to accept the realism, but gently and firmly influence them, entertaining at the same time.

MIRROR LIFE

"In 'The Way of All Men' we tried to do this. Whether the result will make it a box-office success is a matter of conjecture. There are always certain things that limit a director's efforts on any picture. It seems these are inescapable, and we do our best in spite of them. Further, we do not have the benefit of continued rehearsals in making film productions. We rehearse once and 'shoot' the scene. The director must watch his characters very carefully, so that one type will not begin to imitate another. For example, one person, supposed to be vivacious, in talking to another who is slow and calculating in speech, will many times unconsciously tend to speak in the same manner. On the stage the actors have several opportunities to remedy this before the play goes on. Not so in pictures. It is 'go on and hope for the best.'"

MORRIS, SR., TAKES FLING

Father of Chester Views Hollywood From Stage of El Capitan, Visits Son

BY ALMA WHITAKER

Being the president of a piano company in "To the Ladies," at El Capitan, is in the nature of a researchful adventure for that veteran of thirty-five years' standing, William Morris.

He is having no end of a good time from several angles. Satirizing the business man of unctuous virtue has peculiar charms for an actor, anyway. Showing how well one can do it has its advantages. And then there's always the prospect that, being in Hollywood, don't you know, Screenland may discover it needs William Morris, Sr., with the same approving affection it has bestowed upon Chester Morris, his son.

Morris pere is a frank old darling. No grand poseur stuff for him. It is with the jolliest twinkle that he confides:

"I may as well admit Mrs. Morris and I are out here largely as a speculation. Of course, we are visiting Chester and all that, but . . . well, if I make the talkies, it won't really distress me. So far, however, they have only wanted me for character parts. That's not my line. Lots of men like George Fawcett can do it better. I have a good line of my own . . . and I hope they'll see me in 'To the Ladies.' Otherwise, oh, well, we'll go back to New York, where they have known all about me for thirty-five years. It's a queer sensation, having to explain who you are in Hollywood . . ." Whereupon Mr. Morris repeated stories of crude persons who asked him, "Have you ever had any stage experience?" Enough to make a fellow feel a bit cynical, eh, what?

Unlike William Collier, Sr., however, William Morris is quite happy to bask in a little of sonny boy's glory . . . a father-and-son story is all right with him. He is proud of the fact that Chester, now so celebrated, received his stage training right in the family, when all of them toured the Orpheum circuit in a sketch, "All the Horrors of Home."

"They all call me Bill," grinned Mr. Morris, "even the children, I mean, and Chester's little boy. That's right. I'd like 'em to know I was leading man for years in the old Empire stock company in New York. I was born in Boston, but there's Irish, Spanish and Welsh blood in my veins. I was the first of my clan to go on the stage, but we lived near a theatrical family who gave me my first part, and my parents never discouraged me.

"Don't you ever believe the stage is losing ground. It's just a dull interval for them. It couldn't die . . . go back in history to Charles II's days . . . No, all that's happening out here is that much of your population is from the small Middle West towns where they had no theater. They are getting educated to the taste for it. Now in New York the theater stands supreme . . .

"Gordon is my writer son. He's just written a fine play called 'Please Omit Flowers.' He'll be out here soon . . . and it's probably going to be done on the screen. We had three boys and one girl—bright youngsters, all of them."

CONSTANCE BENNETT A WANDERER

Exotic Actress Winning Laurels on 'Outside Lots;' is Pathe Player

With nothing to do on the home lot but play around, Constance, eldest of the three Bennett sisters, has been wandering far afield in order to make her mark in the world. The home lot is Pathe, a nice place out Culver City way, and Constance is under duress there for three years to come.

Well, not really duress. The home lot is being "big" about it. Constance has emoted successfully for First National ("Son of the Gods,") Warner Brothers ("Three Faces East,") and Fox ("Common Clay.") "Three Faces East" is at Warner's Downtown Theater now.

Of course, Constance did play in a couple of films on the home lot. One was "Rich People" and the other "This Thing Called Love." She will do others as required.

This strange, exotically blond daughter of the theater has something of the sprite in her. Not beautiful as the word is ordinarily measured, but with features that a modern with brush and palette might delight in, she possesses a magnetic vitality that shines unexpectedly when she looks in your direction; much more important than beauty. She moves lissomely, more fragile than on the screen, and in repose will talk about everything but newspaper stories like this one.

She has scrupulous words of kindness for everyone with whom she has worked in the talkies. It was pleasant to work with Erich Von Stroheim, actor, and Roy Del Ruth, director, on "Three Faces East." So, "Common Clay," they say, is an exceptionally good picture. Isn't that nice?

Constance entered the movies some years ago at the behest of Samuel Goldwyn, who wanted her for Hergesheimer's "Cytherea." After appearing in several other silent films, she married Phil Plant, a gentleman of means, and spent the next four years alternating between New York and continental cities. She played golf with her husband, reserving tennis as her very own game. Divorced now, she no longer plays golf, finding in tennis all she had hoped for. Her manager declares she is also a good business woman, and a bunch of film fans derive pleasure from watching her on the screen. Miss Bennett's star is in the ascendant.

Complexion of Schoolgirl Is Grant Withers's

Grant Withers, Warner Brothers juvenile, who is featured with Loretta Young in "The Second Floor Mystery" at the Tower Theater, has one distinction at least. All he has to do to make up is to shave.

GRANT WITHERS

Many people who imagine their schoolgirl complexions have been retained are horrified when they see an unretouched photograph of themselves. Blotches and spots invisible to the naked eye are picked up by the camera, and that is the reason why everybody working before a motion-picture camera under strong lights has to wear heavy-grease make-up.

Withers uses no make-up whatever. He simply glides a razor over his face, dabs on a little powder and is ready for the cry of "camera."

'Big Pond' Now Being Shown at Pantages

A triple headline program is being offered to patrons of the Pantages Hollywood Theater this week featuring Maurice Chevalier in his latest production, "The Big Pond."

In "The Big Pond," the fascinating Chevalier is seen as a young Frenchman of poor but honorable family who is suddenly projected into American business. As a guide to a party of Americans in Venice, Maurice becomes enamored of Claudette Colbert, daughter of an American chewing-gum manufacturer. Her father and her rival, seeing Maurice as a fortune-hunting "foreigner," concoct a scheme to make him regret that he ever planned to visit the States. They offer him a job in the gum factory. He becomes a power in the factory and wins Claudette by applying high-pressure business tactics to his romantic cause. Others who give portrayals are George Barbier, Frank Lyon and Marion Ballou.

INA CLAIRE AT BELASCO

Ina Claire will appear tomorrow night in Donald Ogden Stewart's comedy, "Rebound," with Robert Williams and others of the original New York cast, at the Belasco.

Miss Claire for years, it is said, has been one of the most popular stars to perform in a Los Angeles theater. Her last appearance here several years ago was greeted by capacity attendance throughout her entire visit.

"Rebound" was selected by Miss Claire for her Los Angeles engagement when she was on a visit to New York early this season. The comedy was obtained for her by her producing managers, Belasco and Curran, and upon the close of the run of the play in the East several of the players were brought west to support the star.

The role of Sara, the wife deeply in love with her frivolous husband, gives Miss Claire an opportunity to display her versatility, not only as a comedienne, but as a dramatic actress, critics say. The locale of the play is smart Long Island and fashionable Paris and the entire three acts sparkle with the dialogue of Humorist Stewart.

Constance Collier, distinguished English actress, staged "Rebound" for Miss Claire.

NAMES GET JUMBLED IN HOLLYWOOD

Numerous Screen Folk Bear Cognomens of Similarity

Name psychology plays an important part in the life of a film star. Often a name is assumed for professional reasons and much confusion may occur from two persons having the same name, but no relation.

Such is the case of Irene Rich. She made the name famous in filmdom, only to find another actress with the name Lillian Rich. Irene went to England to make a picture, and then a producer sent Lillian to the same country. Now Lillian is back in Hollywood and Irene is winning fresh laurels in talking pictures.

William Janney, a young juvenile 21 years of age, finds his name confused with that of Leon Janney, 13 years of age. William is the son of Russell Janney, New York producer, but "Variety" recently carried a biography of Leon, citing him as the son of Russell Janney and giving him credit for William's role in "Dawn Patrol."

E. H. Griffith has become a successful director entirely apart from the similarity of his name and that of D. W. Griffith. Two Ann Harding pictures, "Paris Bound" and "Holiday," have been directed by E. H. Griffith.

Zelma O'Neal is no relation to Nance O'Neil, or to Sally O'Neil. Alexander Gray and Lawrence Gray are strangers. Loretta Young followed Clara Kimball Young to the screen. Mary and Gertrude Astor are not related. Much confusion ensued when William Boyd of stage fame arrived in Hollywood to work alongside William Boyd of pictures.

Child Player Kept Busy at Many Things

How to bring up a 9-year-old child, who is the pet of a motion-picture studio's entire personnel, is the problem faced by Mitzi Green's parents.

A few questions asked as to what they intend doing about it revealed that their solution is to keep Mitzi busy.

In the ten months since Mitzi won a long-term contract with Paramount, the child actress has become a favorite of stars, featured players and technicians at the Hollywood studio. But Mitzi has little time to heed the ado made about her. She is considered one of the hardest workers in Hollywood.

In addition to her work before the cameras, she must attend school several hours each day, taking French lessons and receive instruction in dancing. When all three of these duties have been attended to, she finds time for a daily set of tennis, a swim or a horseback ride.

ALBERTSON WORKED IN TAILOR SHOP

Screen Player Helped Clothes Makers to Pay School Expenses

From pulling basting threads in a tailor shop to featured roles in talking pictures is the story, in brief, of Frank Albertson's career.

MAUREEN O'SULLIVAN

Albertson as a boy, in order to pay his way through Hollywood High School, worked at odd jobs, and one of them was assisting the tailors in one of Hollywood's fashionable shops, the same shop, by the way, that turned out the dress suit and other modish garments he wears in "So This is London," Will Rogers's current Fox Movietone success now in its fifth week at the Carthay Circle Theater. Albertson plays the juvenile role opposite Maureen O'Sullivan.

Two of Albertson's hobbies are collecting railroad time tables and carving figures out of soap. As a result he is able to give complete information relating to the time of departures and arrivals of trains in all the big cities and knows most of the connections with other roads. Albertson declares that as a memory course it has no equal.

Albertson has come rapidly to the front as a screen actor since he played a role in "Blue Skies," a Fox silent picture, a little more than a year ago, appearing successively and successfully in such audible pictures as "Salute," "Men Without Women," "The Big Party" and "Born Reckless."

'MAD WORLD' WAS TOUGH FOR DE MILLE

Adaptation of French Play Proved Difficult For Director

From William De Mille, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer director, it was learned that this successful transposer of stage plays to screen form was almost "stumped" in adapting his latest film, "This Mad World," from the French stage play, "Terre Inhumaine," because of its very limited range of action.

William DeMille

De Mille stated he was particularly pleased with the outcome of "This Mad World," the spy drama which is enjoying its first run in Los Angeles this week at the Boulevard, inasmuch as it has been his most difficult job to date. In keeping the picture in its original play form he was forced to retain the small size of the original cast, which contained only five persons. He was furthermore restricted in keeping the time of the action between the hours of 4 p.m. and 10 a.m. of the next day.

"This was not so easy as it may seem," De Mille explained. "Film audiences have become used to huge stretches of time in pictures, including throw-backs of past events, chronological events in history, dream sequences and other cinema tricks which have spread out the time element to cover days, weeks and even years. To suddenly thrust on the public a story which is depicted as starting late one afternoon and ending the next morning required new conception and manner of handling.

"But I think we got away with it," De Mille concluded, "and if I am a judge of public taste, movie fans are going to like this picture so much that they will create a demand for more of its kind."

De Mille was fortunate in having such accomplished players as Kay Johnson, Basil Rathbone, Louise Dresser, Veda Buckland and Louis Natheaux in the cast.

"Merton" Now at Pasadena

"Merton of the Movies" is now in its second and last week at the Pasadena Community Playhouse. This comedy of the Hollywood-struck youth, first novelized by Harry Leon Wilson, and then dramatized by Marc Connelly and George S. Kaufman, has been brought up to date. Even the script has been rewritten with the latest "lot lingo." Sixteen-year-old Franklin Provo has the title part.

Paul Muni will be the visiting star in a new, modern play, "The Man Saul," opening at the Playhouse the 31st inst.

SUE'S NAME WAS CHANGED

When most little girls her age were learning their a, b, c's, Sue Carol was speaking French and German. She didn't know a word of English, although she was born and reared in America.

SUE CAROL

Sue Carol was born in Chicago. She was named Evelyn Lederer. When fate guided her into filmdom she was not aware that producers have a way of changing things — even one's name. It was decided that her present name would grace the theater marquees in a manner to please the most harassed manager. Marquees are just so long, and just so many letters must fit the spaces.

She is cofeatured with Arthur Lake in Ratio's romatic comedy, "She's My Weakness," now showing at the R.-K.-O. Theater. In this she is permitted to play her natural self. It is the story of a young man and girl who want to get married but can't because the girl's parents don't want them to.

DIO WRITING DIFFICULT

One Picture Ten, Necessary in Film Stories, Says Bess Meredyth, Scenarist

BY ELENA BOLAND

writing for moving pictures is a funny business. First comes an idea, a writing and becomes a story. It ought to end there, but it doesn't. The work hasn't even started.

It takes a board of brains to pass on it, eight or ten of them maybe more. producers, directors, the star. None of them ever agrees. Then comes the "final draft." Another says "You can't get by with that." And writer, Bess Meredyth, [illegible] name attached itself to such opuses as "Ben Hur," "The Sea Beast," "Don Juan" and "When a Man Loves." Another work of pure pleasure, she declares, is "Our Blushing Brides," the third of the Joan Crawford-Anita Page-Dorothy Sebastian youth series, which is dated for a near release.

The motion-picture industry and Bess Meredyth have grown wiser together. Giving up her place as leading ingenue on Broadway, she went with the old Biograph company and rose to stardom. On the side she wrote—stories, scenarios, anything. A sickness took her off the screen and she has written ever since—without regret.

Girls Apply to Olsen for Chorus Places

"Florenz Ziegfeld, George White and Earl Carroll would surpass all Broadway standards if they ever selected a Hollywood 'chorus,'" says George Olsen, orchestra director, whose new club in Culver City is already known from coast to coast.

"Blonds, brunettes and titians—youthful, gorgeous and spirited—they come here for the films, but after the novelty—and sometimes disappointment—of the camera and the microphone wears off they are anxious to sign up for night club revues and stage productions.

"During the first rehearsal week of our new summer revue more than 1200 show girls called at the club for places in the chorus. What a parade of beauty! Girls from every State in the Union. Many of those who applied were from recent screen musicals and consequently they were trained in tap, broken rhythm and other fast dance routines, all of which are necessary in a floor show."

In the current offering at Olsen's the show girls appear in "Sunkist Trail," a colorful Indian pow-wow; "Pajama Serenade," a nocturnal fantasy; "Happy Days," rollicking ensemble, and other numbers.

SKINNER FINDS FILMS EXACTING

New Tension Prevails in Studios, Star of "Kismet" Observes; Rene Fulop-Miller of Vienna Studies Hollywood Phenomena

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT

TEN years ago he made a silent picture of "Kismet." The past week he was appearing in the final scenes of the same glamorous production. Between the two films there was a complete void, as far as Otis Skinner's association with the studios goes. Consequently, he of all actors has an ample perspective on the differences between the two. And his conclusion is that the films with voice are much, much more exacting, though many times more interesting to work in.

"The thing that I have felt on the set oftentimes while appearing in the new version of 'Kismet' is the concentrated worry of everybody connected with the picture," he declared. "The director, the cameraman, the sound mixer, even, I might say, the prop boy, live tensely on the hope that the scene will be right and when you are playing it you feel the entire weight of this concern that they are all experiencing."

Skinner indicated that it was a heavy load to carry, but that he could meet it with abundant resilience.

THE role of Hajj, the beggar-adventurer in "Kismet," is the most brilliant that he ever played in the theater. Possibly he is better known for "The Honor of the Family," but "Kismet," though it has not been revived by him, was his most spectacular exploit.

It should be a great story for the pictures. As Skinner himself says: "It is a motion picture!"

The stage play thrived because it was so marvelously colorful in scene and story. Judging from the settings that are being given the film, this will retain and perhaps amplify the original's magnificence and beauty.

"There is no careless handling of any scene in a talking picture, whereas in the silents it didn't make much difference what was done in the long shots." This is one of Skinner's especial observations.

One might note en passant that this famous actor is looking forward to becoming a grandfather. His daughter is expecting an arrival very soon.

RENE FULOP-MILLER, the Viennese author, is remaining over for a slight-ly longer period than he originally anticipated. He is doing some technical advisory work at the Fox studios which will, I understand, keep him here for a few extra days at least.

Fulop-Miller is vastly interested in the American type of film comedy. In conversation his inquiries are concerned with Charles Chaplin, Harold Lloyd, Buster Keaton and, above all, Mickey Mouse, whom he immensely admires, rather than with the more familiar dramatic stars.

The power which Greta Garbo seems to hold over the public also fascinates him. In this case it is more the public attitude than the star that holds him intrigued and doubtless in the forthcoming book that he writes on the film colony he will have much of psychological interest to say on this subject.

THIS noted literary figure is a charming man to meet personally. I do not recall any other European author who has visited—and I have met a number of them—who talks so easily and so penetratingly.

Life genuinely holds an absorbing fascination for him and he delves ever for its psychological wellsprings.

He questions somewhat the optimistic outlook of Hollywood and of America in general. He wonders how deep its foundation is rooted in actual feeling, or shall one say, a true sincerity.

Even in criticism, though his attitude is kindly, and he is anxious to understand what in the consciousness of the individual or the mass is the cause for any outward manifestation he observes.

The Fulop-Miller books have shown amply the fruits of his thorough-going analysis.

"DAWN PATROL" PACKS THEATER

Barthelmess Air Film Best Seen in East

BY NORBERT LUSK

NEW YORK, July 19. (Exclusive) The strongest and most popular of the new pictures is "The Dawn Patrol" at the Winter Garden. Shown in conjunction with only a few short subjects, it is crowding the big theater all day and virtually all night, the doors being opened at 10 a.m and the last show ending at 2:30 a.m.

It is almost needless to add that it has been received with enthusiasm by the critics. This, backed by public response, insures a long and profitable run for what is conceded to be a picture far superior to "Wings" and the best aviation film yet exhibited here. Its similarity to "Journey's End" is too apparent in so far as characterizations are concerned, but it has the advantage of movement and variety of scenes, to say nothing of all players well known to the picture-going public, and on the whole is better suited to the screen than the Sherriff play. Technically it is brilliant and the destruction of the enemy arsenal, supply depot, railroad junction etc., is magnificently achieved.

As for individual performances, they too are entirely in keeping with the intelligence of the picture as a whole. Richard Barthelmess exceeds any recent portrayal and is thought to have equaled any pictures he has ever given, though the role is not what the average star would consider truly of stellar proportions. Therefore, Mr. Barthelmess is commended for his judgment in visioning a picture larger than his part in it.

Neil Hamilton also is applauded for his mature conceptions of a role that is more lifelike than any he has had since "Beau Geste," and his playing of it is as effectively put forth as in the earlier work. Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., likewise, is given honors for the best performance he has ever contributed and his increasing expertness and authority are duly noted with superlatives galore. William Janney and Gardner James are acknowledged, as are all numbers of the cast.

"Let Us Be Gay," is being held over at the Capitol which is, when all is said, proof positive of its success with the public. It is interesting to note that all Norma Shearer's pictures nowadays meet with this box-office distinction. In the case of her latest efforts it is well deserved, for she appears in a piece that combines society atmosphere with human appeal, enables her to wear advance styles and surrounds her with an admirable cast, of which Marie Dressler is the bright particular member. Miss Dressler's first appearance on the screen invariably invokes a murmur of warm recognition. Rod La Rocque gives his best performance since he lapsed into speech. Gilbert Emery is praised for one of his suavest, and Raymond Hackett and Sally Eilers are admirable as the young lovers. All in all, the picture is rated as exceptional, even for Miss Shearer.

GARY COOPER PRAISED

"A Man from Wyoming" packed the Paramount at the hour of what is usually the ebb tide in attendance, Monday afternoon at 5:45, and later in the week response was even greater. The reason is not hard to find. It is Gary Cooper, plus a picture better than "The Texan," its predecessor, and performance on the part of the star which almost equals in appeal his work in "Seven Days' Leave," and exceeds it in expertness, and presents June Collyer in the most mature and believable role that has ever fallen to her lot. Between them they play their scenes with a naturalness and simple sincerity that proves irresistible.

Fault is found with the continuity, it is true, and the first part of the picture up to the point where the young husband and wife meet at Nice is far more lifelike and believable than the episodes that follow, but excellent direction and a high order of acting invest the proceedings with interest and even suspense. At least it proves Mr. Cooper's right to stellar billing and it also confirms the belief that, given half a chance, his influence on the box-office is pronounced.

"LAWFUL LARCENY"

One of the pleasant surprises of the week is found in "Lawful Larceny" at the Globe, and the supremacy of Bebe Daniels in a role devoid of songs or background of musical comedy. The old melodrama is directed by Lowell Sherman with the loving care of one who shared in its successes on the stage, which it to say that Mr Sherman gives it dramatic values as well as inflections of ironic comedy that no stranger to the work could possibly have supplied. Playing also one of the principal roles he moves through the picture with the ease of one who knows that he is giving the public what it wants. Needless to say Mr. Sherman's performance is exceptional, for no matter how freely he lays himself open to the charges of smugness of superficiality he is without successful imitators.

FELLOWS RETURNS

Rockliffe Fellows, who has been absent from the screen for some time, while he appeared in two stage presentations, will again be seen by his many motion-picture fans in "Beyond Victory," a Pathe picture directed by John Robertson, in which he plays an important part.

Stage Actress Likes Work in Sound Films

Against the many Broadway stars who consider the stage as the ideal medium of dramatic expression, there is Marjorie Rambeau who casts her vote for talking pictures.

"I find more inspiration in doing my first talking picture than I have in many a stage production," asserted Miss Rambeau, who is featured in the Pathe special, "Her Man," now in production under the direction of Tay Garnett.

"You don't get the satisfaction in a stage play that you get in the motion picture," declares Miss Rambeau. "If you appear in a flop, that's that. If it's a long run, it gets mechanical. In a motion-picture you're always doing something new, putting your best into every effort; and if your best isn't good enough, you have a chance to rectify any mistakes by doing the scene over and over again. It can't possibly become mechanical. And if it's a flop—at least, you're out of the range of the tomatoes."

Pirate Film Being Shown at Filmarte

Pirates, sea adventures, romance and picturesque combats have come to life on the screen of the Filmarte Theater where "Peter the Pirate" is offering entertainment.

This is a sea drama made at the German UFA studio from the novel of the same name written by Wilhelm Hegeler. It has been directed by Arthur Robison.

The role of Peter, the lad who ventures into the pirate fold and becomes the greatest buccaneer of them all, is portrayed by Paul Richter, the handsome actor who made the part of Siegfried so outstanding in the UFA spectacle, "Siegfried," shown at the Filmarte several months ago.

Need of Sixth Sense Evident in Elimination

Knowing what to keep out of the picture is more important than knowing what to put in it, ventures Roy Del Ruth. This veteran director of the Warner Brother's staff adheres to the doctrine of elimination in making pictures; that is, of dispensing with every detail of sequence and dialogue that is not strictly pertinent to the development of the story in hand.

To perform this function expertly a sort of sixth sense is necessary, according to Del Ruth, for it is not easy, until the production is complete, to determine what footage could have been spared without detracting from the integrity of the story. But the error of putting in too much is usually committed more often than that of omitting essential scenes, he avers.

Arabian Nights Duplicated in Screen History

The stories of Ali Baba and his wealth and the good fortune of Aladdin have their counterparts in the actual history of the motion pictures. Fabulous wealth and universal fame await the man or woman who has the talent or the personality to catch the public fancy, declares Melville Brown, the director chosen by R.-K.-O. to direct Amos 'n Andy in their first picture.

Brown recently returned from the East, where he consulted the popular radio comedians about their initial story for the screen. He reports that the popularity of these boys surpasses anything he has ever witnessed, and that their fabulous income from radio, personal appearance, picture contracts and other auxiliary sources is daily increasing.

GRAND OPERA PLANS MADE

Ten Productions Will be Given at Auditorium During Season Beginning September 29

Plans are being completed for the presentation of the annual grand opera season in the Shrine Auditorium, September 29 to October 13, David T. Babcock, president of the Los Angeles Grand Opera Association, announced yesterday.

In all, ten operas are to be given, including one double bill, with the leading singers of the world taking the leading roles. Gaetano Merola, director-general of the association, has obtained the leading Metropolitan Opera stars of New York, as well as three European favorites, who are to make their American debuts during the local season. Mme. Clare Clairbert, Gastano Viviani and Sidney Rayner are the three who will be heard in this country for the first time.

Returning favorites and other singers who will be heard for the first time on the Pacific Coast are Beniamino Gigli, Maria Jeritza, Hope Hampton, Queena Mario, Pinza, John Charles Thomas, Frederick Jagel, Dorothee Manski and Elinor Mario. The complete repertoire is as follows.

COMPLETE REPERTOIRE

September 29—"La Boheme," with Mario, Gigli, Viviani and Pinza.
October 1—"Tannhauser," with Jeritza, Thomas, Rayner and Pinza.
October 3—"La Traviata," with Clairbert, Gigli and Thomas.
October 4—Double bill: "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Hansel and Gretel," with Jeritza, Jagel, Manski, Mario and Mario.
October 6—"Manon," with Hampton, Gigli and Pinza.
October 7—"Salome," with Jeritza, Thomas, Rayner and Manski.
October 9—"Mignon,' with Clairbert, Mario, Gigli and Pinza.
October 11—"Girl of the Golden West," with Jeritza, Pagel and Viviani.
October 13—"Lucia," with Clairbert, Thomas and Jagel.

All of the leading singers have been appearing in the leading operahouses of Europe this summer and cables have told of repeated triumphs, largely in the operas in which the stars will be heard here.

REHEARSALS UNDER WAY

Chorus rehearsals have been under way since May 15, last, with Dr. Karl Riedel of the Metropolitan Opera in charge. Serge Oukrainsky is to start the ballet work soon, and Armando Agnini will arrive shortly to supervise the final work on the stage settings. Agnini, stage manager of the Metropolitan, has arranged for new sets for practically all of the operas. "Tannhauser" is to be done in an impressionistic manner; "Salome" will have a modern setting; and "Girl of the Golden West," will have a true Western ranch house for a background.

The Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra is to play at the operas, with five noted conductors sharing the work of directing the musicians. They are Merola, Pietro Cimini, formerly of the Chicago Civic Opera; Dr. Arthur Rodzinski, director of the Philharmonic Orchestra; and Dr. Riedel and Wilfred Pelletier, both of the Metropolitan Opera.

PEDAGOGUE HOLDS VOICE AUDITIONS

Local Music Students Receive Awards After Examinations

Through the medium of the Artist Students' Endowment, auditions were held a few days ago resulting in the award of two scholarships by Mme. Madeleine Walther, celebrated voice pedagogue of the Institute of Music Art, New York City.

Of the many who registered, the effort of Miss Castida Cecelia Mayo-Torena, soprano, of 979 South Oxford avenue, and Sherman Everett Smith, baritone, of 451 Beverwil Drive, Beverly Hills, culminated in being awarded the coveted distinction. The period of study will cover three months, the lessons to be given in Los Angeles, where Mme. Walther is residing for the summer.

The Eastman School of Music of Rochester, N. Y., is also to be represented at auditions to be held in Los Angeles during the month of August. Instrumental and vocal scholarships will be offered. The auditions are not in any way conducted in the form of a contest, since several students may be the recipients of scholarships, if worthy, whereas, no one may receive an award if the talent displayed is not up to the necessary standard for eligibility.

The aim of the endowment is to discover unusual talent among the music students on the Pacific Coast, and to give them the best possible opportunity of further development. To this end, master schools and master teachers, in the East as well as in Southern California, have offered full co-operation.

All arrangements for the auditions are to be made through the Artist Students' Endowment by communicating in writing with Dr. Leonard Siever, 409 Professional Building, Pasadena.

LOHENGRIN PROGRAM WILL BE GIVEN

Margaret Goetz's pictured program of "Lohengrin" will take place next Wednesday, assisted by Elisabeth Siegel, soprano; Viola Ellis, contralto; Cardell Bishop, tenor; Norman Ives, baritone. George Walker and Gage Christopher, bassos, and Josephine Wowlers, women's quartet, with Pauline Cohen and Grace Munger, accompanists, at her studio; 1051 South Westlake avenue at 3 and 8 p.m.

Ridgway Will Be Director in Music Studio

Charles Arthur Ridgway, composer, pianist and organist, has accepted the directorship of the music department of the Harrison-Wallack Studios.

Mr. Ridgway came to Los Angeles less than two years ago from the East and has already exercised a distinct influence in musical circles. Thoroughly trained in the Boston Conservatory of Music under such teachers as Percy Goetschius and Homer A. Norris, Ridgway's musicianship is recognized.

He will personally conduct classes in theory, counterpoint and composition as well as co-operate in all branches of the music department. He hopes to establish certain original methods tried out successfully in Dayton, where for fifteen years he conducted the Dayton Conservatory of Music.

Since coming West Mr. Ridgway has devoted most of his time to composition. His cantata, "I Will Extol Thee," has been published and given with great success here and elsewhere. Two other numbers, a solo and an anthem, have been accepted for publication. A modern musical setting to the poem of Katherine Peck, "Traffic," has attracted attention wherever it has been given in public.

Mr. Ridgway will conduct classes in advanced piano, pipe organ, coaching and accompanying for concert repertoire, master classes for teachers based on the progressive series, as well as harmony, counterpoint and composition. Special lectures on musical history and theory will be given his pupils.

Organists to Assemble Here During Month

The National Association of Organists will meet in Los Angeles this year on its twenty-third annual convention during the week of the 28th inst. Among the officers, Roland Diggle of this city serves as vice-president. The local entertainment committee is composed of Dr. Diggle, Dudley Warner Fitch, Percy Shaul-Hallett, Paul Hanft, George Kilgen, Clarence Mader, Glenn Tindall and Stanley W. Williams.

Programs by internationally known organists will be presented. John Smallman's Choir will sing the German requiem of Brahms and the entire convention group will attend the Hollywood Bowl. Harold V. Milligan of New York is president of the association.

Alicia Muma Returns Here

Alicia Muma (Mrs. Irwin Johnston Muma) has returend from her tour of Australia and New Zealand, upon which she embarked immediately after the close of the Columbia Grand Opera season. The soprano sang in many of the far outposts of art, and also sang with the Sydney Sympathy Orchestra in the historic Town Hall, scene of the early Melba triumphs.

Next October she will go to Japan on a recital tour, under the management of Bertha Metzger.

SOPRANO WILL SING AT BOWL

Elsa Alsen

Elsa Alsen, one of the most impressive musical figures before the public, and formerly dramatic soprano of the Chicago Opera Company, will sing with Molinari at the Bowl Friday. She sang in the Redlands Bowl last Friday.

Mme. Alsen has been claimed the greatest living Wagnerian soprano by many critics, and has an extensive repertory ranging from Ausens. Delila, Carmen and all the roles of Wagner. She launched her career at the age of 18 singing contralto parts, but upon the advice of several distinguished conductors she abandoned contralto for soprano.

Other programs announced for the near future by the Redlands Community Music Association is the Zoellner-Blakeslee Concert Choir, Earl Blakeslee, conductor, which will appear Tuesday evening, following the community singing and the full program for Friday evening, which will feature Michio Ito, Japanese dancer with assisting dancers and pianist.

Mezzo-Soprano Stars in Film

Louise Caselotti, mezzo-soprano, and daughter of Guido Caselotti, Los Angeles vocal instructor, who has just finished her first talking picture as star in the Italian version "Sei tu L'Amore" made by the Talotone Pictures Corporation, was the soloist who sang at a banquet given by the Italo-American Welfare Society last Wednesday, in honor of Bernardino Molinari, Italian conductor, who is to direct the Hollywood Bowl concerts beginning Tuesday.

Another soloist of interest is Maria Caselotti, coloratura soprano and wife of Guido Caselotti, who, last Thursday, appeared as the vocal soloist with the Santa Ana Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of D. C. Cianfoni. Mme. Caselotti was heard in the title role of "La Traviata," presented by the Long Beach Opera Company last fall. Both Louise Caselotti and Maria Caselotti have received their entire vocal training from Guido Caselotti.

Bowl Programs Being Analyzed

Hollywood Bowl current programs are being discussed and analyzed weekly by students of the University of Southern California summer session under the direction of Donsella Cross Boyle, visiting instructor at S.C. from the College in Music of Cincinnati.

In her lectures Mrs. Boyle aims to give the university student a fuller understanding and appreciation of the music being offered at the Hollywood Bowl.

PIERRE KEY'S Music Article

BY PIERRE V. R. KEY

NEW YORK, July 20.—Opera for suburbanites is just around the corner. Beginning this winter the Metropolitan Opera Company is to inaugurate the plan by giving two performances in the new Westchester Country Center Auditorium in White Plains. Only recently completed and dedicated (as readers of this column will doubtless recall,) it seats some 5000 persons, and may be conveniently reached from points several miles distant. It represents the first attempt to cater to people who live too far from New York to undertake the tiresome journey into town and home again in an evening—particularly for the men who have spent the day at their offices. That it will be a success is an assured fact; and the Metropolitan can well afford, ultimately, to eliminate its Brooklyn performances, transferring them to White Plains . . . which is a much greater distance from New York.

Brooklynites would not cheer such a move. They like their representations in the Academy of Music; but it is far easier for them to go to the Metropolitan Opera House at Manhattan's Broadway and Thirty-ninth street than for Westchester Country suburbanites to make the (for them) longer and more tiresome journey.

Mrs. Eugene Meyer, chairman of the Westchester Country Recreation Commission, and Otto H. Kahn, chairman of the Metropolitan Opera board, made the arrangements. Mrs. Meyer is gratified over what she predicts will establish a precedent for the Chicago Company (and, eventually, for other opera organizations.)

Mr. Kahn's comments in the matter touch upon so much that affects the life to today that it deserves to be given the widest possible reading.

PADEREWSKI ON GENIUS

The one-and-only Paderewski also has some things to say about the music arts. To a certain extent he and Mr. Kahn agree; but there are points the great pianist makes which might not cause others to feel quite as he feels.

For example, while he is right in declaring (as does Mr. Kahn) that for his best work the creative artist needs "quiet" which admits of concentration, Paderewski would seem to be making a broad statement when he says that "genius, and, therefore the creation of great art, is impossible under the present system of living."

Paderewski also wishes to know where one can find, today, a Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Chopin and Schumann. Well, where were they to be found thirty years ago when "Paddy" was at the height of his career?

The pianist's opinion that "the average composer of today seems to be seeking color only" of a sort which is scarcely music will undoubtedly be shared in by others. And also that "a renaissance of art" will eventually ensue.

But precisely what he means in stating that we must wait for it until we have passed "beyond this age of comfort into an age of luxury" is puzzling, for if ever the United States has sniffed luxury it would appear to have been doing so in late years.

There are many who believe that our music renaissance is not far distant and that, as Paderewski maintains, it probably will make its appearance first in the United States.

Composition of Tiomkin on Bowl Program

Heralded as an innovation among ultra-modern works, "Suite Choreographique" is the title of an elaborate musical composition being created by Dimitri Tiomkin, young Russian composer and pianist of international repute, for the Hollywood Bowl program the night of August 1.

DIMITRI TIOMKIN

Tiomkin's composition, in four movements, will be rendered by the Hollywood Bowl orchestra, conducted by Arthur Lange, loaned for the occasion by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, and will be interpreted by an Albertina Rasch ballet of sixty dancers.

Known as a classicist converted to the modern school, Tiomkin will be remembered for his invasion of the Paris Opera, citadel of the conservatives, recently, playing the ultra-modern compositions of George Gershwin and his own musical creations, which attracted world-wide attention and resulted in an invitation to repeat the visit.

David Reese Teaching Here

David Reese, an opera singer with a European and New York reputation, is now teaching in Hollywood His preparation is in the Italian method.

Mr. Reese is a pupil of George Ferguson of Berlin, of Oscar Saenger of New York and of the late David Bispham.

MISS RUSSELL TO APPEAR

Florence Russell will accompany two of her pupils in recital at the Sutro-Seyler Studio August 4. Vesta Redmon, soprano, and Hagop Pesolan, baritone, will appear with Helen Muchnic, violinist, pupil of Henry Svedrofsky, and Dorothy Dodge, pianist, pupil of Julius V. Seyler. Miss Redmon is a member of the Los Angeles Grand Opera chorus and Mr. Pesolan appeared two seasons with that organization.

MUSIC LECTURES WILL BE GIVEN

Dr. Bruce Gordon Kingsley

An event in Los Angeles musical circles this summer will be the series of lectures to be given by the well-known musician and teacher, Dr. Bruce Gordon Kingsley, at the Conservatory of Music,

GUEST CONDUCTOR READY

Bernardino Molinari Will Begin His Four Week Bowl Engagement as Guest Director Tuesday

Bernardino Molinari, who begins a four weeks' engagement as guest conductor of the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra, was born in Rome in 1890. As a boy he studied the piano. Later he entered the Musicale of Santa Cecelia, taking harmony and organ with Sgambati, Renzi, and composition with Stanislaw Falchi.

Molinari's first important engagement in the musical world came in 1909 when he was asked to prepare the concerts of Richard Strauss at the Augusteo. He accomplished his work so well that he was engaged as a regular conducter, and in 1913 he was made general art director of the Augusteo.

FESTIVALS CONDUCTED

Under his regime the orchestra of the Augusteum has become one of the most important organizations in Europe. In addition to the great Beethoven festival, Molinari has organized and conducted festivals in honor of Martucci, Debussy, Sgambati, Saint-Saens and Alessandro Scarlatti.

He has been especially interested in the great choral works, and Rome has recently heard under Molinari the Missa Solemnis of Beethoven, the Requiem of Berlioz, the King David of Honegger and a number of the oratorios of Lorenzo Perosi which had not been given in many years.

In 1915 Molinari took the orchestra of the Augusteum on its first tour of Italy. Later, in order to spread the fame of the orchestra and to introduce Italian music to other countries, he expanded his tours. In 1925 the orchestra visited not only Italy, but Switzerland, Germany and Czecho-Slovakia, giving thirty-two concerts in thirty-five days, with eight changes of program. In May, 1927, Molinari was invited to direct the Augusteum orchestra in a concert at Victoria Hall, Geneva, for the International Society for Contemporary Music Festival.

WORLD-WIDE APPEARANCES

Molinari, when his work at the Augusteo permit, has appeared all over the world as guest conductor. In Italy he has directed at La Scala, Milan, San Carlo, Naples, Teatre Reggio, Turin; in Buenos Aires at the La Canon; in Prague he has conducted a series of symphonic concerts regularly every year since 1921; invited by Richard Strauss to conduct "Aida" at State Opera in Vienna; also conducted in London, Liverpool and Antwerp.

He has also transcribed and arranged a number of works for orchestra—"Sonata Sopra Santa Maria" of Claudio Monteverdi; music of Vivaldi, and at the request of Debussy he arranged for large orchestra the piano composition "L'Isle Joyeuse."

The Italian conductor came to this country for his first visit as guest conductor of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra in January, 1926.

That season he also conducted at St. Louis Symphony for five weeks. During the summer of 1926 he was heard in San Francisco and Los Angeles as well as at the Lewisohn Stadium concerts.

Since then he has played regularly. During 1928-29 he was guest conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the New York Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra. The summer of 1929 found him again on the Coast at the invitation of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, the Hollywood Bowl. During this visit Molinari was a regular conductor of the New York Philharmonic Symphony for five weeks, with the St. Louis Symphony again for one night, and guest conductor of the Detroit Symphony for a week.

VSERVATORY OF MUSIC

TERPSICHORE PLAYS PART

Proves Important Factor in the Evolution of the Present Day Audible Screen

Dancing and motion pictures are childhood playmates. For more than forty-five years dancing has been a favorite in cinematic entertainment. Because it combines fast movement with grace and beauty, it has brought to the dramatic screen numerous dancers who have remained to become well-known actresses.

Only a few months were recently uncovered at the Paramount studio in Hollywood for fiesta scenes in a current picture. Although this picture is an outgrowth of the early Spanish story of the early California days, "Ramona," one dance has been selected to show life of that period. Rosita Moreno to perform the rumba in which she has become famous since her eighth birthday.

The history of the cinema shows that dancing first entered the screen when Henry Renno Heyl of Salt Lake City, invented a machine known as the phasmatrope. It carried a series of positive pictures, mounted around the edge of a wheel which exposed them consecutively to the light rays from a magic lantern. This invention included a shutter and a ratchet and pinion which produced all the mechanical effects necessary for the projection of pictures. Dancers, Heyl and a dancing horse were photographed in six different stages of the waltz. The pictures were reduced in size to positives on glass a little larger than a postage stamp. Then, by the printed three pictures of each turn of the wheel in the three turns of the waltz with the magic prisis. Orchestral music was synchronized and 1600 persons came for the world premiere presentation of this feature.

THEN EDISON CAME

Then we skip to the years when Thomas Edison had perfected his kinetoscope or peep-show and was ready to make a few short subjects for introduction to the world. Among the first films was one of Mae Lukas, solo dancer in "The Gaiety Girl," a current attraction playing at Daly's Theater in New York.

This dancing act is of significance because it was the first production of dancing in rapid motion for motion-picture use of any type. Miss Lukas, Maggie Cronland and Lucy Daly did the carnival dance from Faust for the kinetoscope.

During the early days of the films also Ruth Dennis was featured in a dancing subject called "Dance." This same girl would become the famous Ruth St. Denis of dance fame.

Also in 1896 came the first queen of the Rosita, and curiously enough the Rosita, was a Spanish dance. Dancing as a subject for the kinetoscope was a favorite since it could be recorded in the confines of the immobile camera. Also, New York was as dance-mad then as now. The famous oriental dance had just been brought to that city and in 1893 there arrived in New York one Carmencita, a Spanish dancer, who created a sensation on the stage.

DRAFTED INTO FILMS

She was drafted into the films and performed before the kinetoscope, as the camera was called, in West Orange, N. J. Since thousands of fans in other cities had heard of Carmencita, they took advantage of this opportunity to see her in the peep-show and the popularity of the machines increased.

In the same year came the first moving films, also due to the efforts of a dancer. She was Annabelle Moore, appearing in music hall as Annabelle-the-Dancer. She did a serpentine dance, waving enormous yards of silken draperies. On the stage, her act was heightened by changing shafts of colored lights thrown upon her. Therefore, after Edison had performed a fifty-foot version of her dance at the Edison studios, many of the films were tinted by hand.

The dance film came at an opportune moment, for shortly after its run in peep-shows came the projection machines and the first screening of pictures and the pictures of Annabelle were destined to play a strong part in this projection.

In the middle of September, 1895, Thomas Armat and C. Francis Jenkins had perfected a projection machine and opened a show at Atlanta, Ga., at the Cotton States Exposition. The stellar picture of the program was the Annabelle-the-Dancer film, in colors, secured from the Edison kinetoscope.

Spectators were skeptical about the bold announcement that inside the tent were living pictures and so the show was opened to the public with admission payable on leaving—if satisfied. It also is interesting to note that the moment the lights were turned out for the show, a riot broke out in the audience, the people believing that this was merely a ruse to pick their pockets.

All of this led up to Edison's own invention, the vitascope, which on April 3, 1896, was demonstrated to the press at the Edison plant in West Orange. It consisted only of Annabelle-the-Dancer and a shot of the English Derby. New York papers were loud in the praise of the new invention.

This preshowing built up interest for the first film premiere. It was held at Koster and Bial's Music Hall, Thirty-fourth street, Herald Square, April 23, 1896. Pictures thrown on a twenty-foot screen showed a dancing number in which several dancers took part, a dash of a prize fight, the surf at Dover, Eng., and several other short subjects.

From that early date until the present, the dance has remained a prominent figure in motion picture. Since those early days, numerous dancers have come to the screen because of their ability and remained to become outstanding favorites. Rosita is the latest of a long list which includes Mae Murray, Gilda Gray, Irene Castle, Theodore Kosloff, Ann Pennington, Nancy Carroll, Joan Crawford and many others who have arrived since the advent of talking pictures.

Word from the Mosconi Brothers Dance Studio states that every day finds new stage and screen celebrities enrolling in classes for the study of various types of dancing. Prior to their settling in Hollywood the Mosconi brothers appeared in many Broadway musical productions, headlined the larger vaudeville theaters throughout the United States and Europe and from year to year have conceived new and interesting dance routines.

PAVLEY AND OUKRAINSKY AT STUDIO

Noted Ballet Masters Next on School's List of Guest Instructors

The Edith Jane School of Dancing announces the Pavley-Oukrainsky Ballet as the next course in the guest instructor series. "The Pavley-Oukrainsky summer course will start at the school on August 11 and will run daily for three weeks. From the pupils of this course, Mr. Oukrainsky will choose the casts for the Los Angeles Civic Opera Ballet and the San Francisco Civic Opera Ballet, which he will stage for the third consecutive year. He will also present the Glendale Symphony Ballet in October.

Among the famous creations of the Pavley-Oukrainsky Ballet, to be given to the summer students are "Pandora's Box," "Clouds," "The Silver Bell," "Idol With the Green Eyes," "Soap Bubbles," "Amphitrite," "Spring," and many others. Ballets will be staged for "Tannhauser," "Manon," "Traviata," "Lucia" and others. Running concurrently with the Pavley-Oukrainsky course, the school will offer tap and acrobatic dancing, drama and fencing.

'Sunbeams' to Tour in Novel Dance Numbers

Bud Murray's "California Sunbeams" unit will open this coming Wednesday at Pasadena and then come into Los Angeles, after which it will go on tour of thirty-two weeks over the Panchon and Marco circuit, according to a report from the studio. The revue was staged by Bud Murray, who has produced the dancing for such well-known New York and Los Angeles productions as "Good News," "Oh, Susanna," R.-K.-O. Theater presentations, and was formerly with the New York Winter Garden.

These girls have taken their training from Bud Murray and were placed in this unit, which is one of the several units that Mr. Murray will produce for Panchon and Marco.

Miss Mary Frances Taylor, former premiere danseuse with such shows as "The Student Prince," "Oh, Susanna," "Gone Hollywood" and "The Broadway Melody," is ballet directress of the Bud Murray School and the tap and off-rhythm department is conducted by Mr. Lafe Page and Mr. Murray.

"Petit Ballet" Wins Plaudits at Festival

Among the interesting affairs of the week was the "Petit Ballet Parisienne," presented as a feature of the French National Festival by Mme. D. Duval, director of the National Studio of Music and Arts at Burbank.

The celebration, which was held at Turnverein Hall, recalled the 140th anniversary of the Fall of the Bastille.

The affair was presided over by Andre Rouseyrol, president of the French colony here, and chairman of the committee of arrangements. Guests of honor included Judge Craig, Mayor Porter, Judge Crawford, Senator Lyons, Sheriff Traeger and others.

The "Petit Ballet" was one of the outstanding events of the afternoon.

Studio Plans New Ventures

Among the interesting celebrities studying with Theodore Kosloff is the versatile comedian, Joe Donahue, who plays the dancing partner of Marilyn Miller in her new screen production, "Sunny." Donahue and Miss Miller are busy with some adagio routines which promise much in the way of entertainment.

Word also comes from the Kosloff Studio that Mr. Van Katwyk, well-known symphony conductor, is expected to arrive shortly from Texas. Van Katwyk and Kosloff plan to complete arrangements for a series of concerts of the great Russian composers, to be given on the same scale as those presented by the pair last February in Fair Park Auditorium, Dallas, Tex.

TANGO POPULAR NOW

The tango has reached Hollywood via the European route and is already catching the fancy of the film players who have wearied of the contortions of the jazz steps. Raquel Torres, the little Mexican actress under contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is an ardent exponent of this type of dance and with a choice of willing partners is learning the intricacies of the dance.

School Adopts Stock Company Regulations

Among the interesting methods adopted by various dramatic schools is that used by Edward Clark, Broadway actor-author - director-producer, who recently opened an academy of stage and screen arts and a Little Theater on Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood.

From the first day a student joins the Clark organization, he or she becomes a full-fledged actor or actress. Students are immediately given parts to study and are made to rehearse daily upon a real stage and in a fully equipped theater. As soon as they have mastered their roles they make an appearance before an assembled audience, then go to other roles for their next offering.

Clark bases his method on the fact that most of the successful actors and actresses of the present day received their early training in stock and repertory companies, which would amount to the same training that they are being given at the new studio.

Dancers Bring Novel Numbers From Europe

During their recent trip to Europe, Kirby and De Gage, who head the Kirby and De Gage Dance Studio, obtained a variety of new dance material from M. Morlay and Senor Rubin, dance directors of the Folies Bergere. Many new dances of Spain, France and the Orient, as well as the new Absolute Dance of Germany, were also brought back from the tour.

The fact that these dances are being featured this month at the studio has brought teachers from all over East and Middle West. Many artists of the stage and screen are also enrolled for summer instruction with the dance team.

Dancer Spends Busy Vacation

The latest Earle Wallace trained dancer who has returned to this city to study at the Earle Wallace Studios of Stage Dancing is Jean MacDonald, who has just completed a thirty weeks' tour over the Panchon and Marco circuit. Miss MacDonald was featured in the "Art in Taps" Idea and did three specialty numbers. Her most sensational was a "Sis Hopkins slow kick" number, in which she does seventy-two high kicks.

Miss MacDonald is still under contract with Panchon and Marco. While waiting for the next idea she is studying the Earle Wallace Americanized ballet technique, modern tap and acrobatics and preparing new routines for her next Panchon and Marco engagement.

BELCHER DANCERS IN FOX THEATER REVUE

A group of sixteen Ernest Belcher dancers are appearing in the "Victor Herbert Idea," a new Panchon and Marco revue, which is to make a tour of the country. The dancers were trained by Belcher especially for this number and they are performing several dances arranged for them by the ballet master.

CINEMA SEPARATES SISTERS

Many are the sister acts of the stage that have become dissolved by the siren call of the movies. A few of them have survived intact, it is true, the Duncans, the Dodge sisters and the G sisters included, but as many have been separated by the lure of picture acting.

When Cecil B. De Mille chose one of the Roth sisters of vaudeville fame to portray the girl "Trixie" in his second Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer talking picture, "Madame Satan," he was generous enough to include the other sister in the cast. Although this gave them an opportunity of remaining together, Lillian was awarded the role of importance, while Anne, equally beautiful and talented, had to content herself with a minor part.

The same is true of the two Spanish sisters, Conchita and Cuanta Montenegro, whose dancing fame drew the attention of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer scouts in Paris, where they were signed to come to America to appear in foreign versions of talking pictures.

POPULARITY OF WESTERN DEBUT GAINS

Dance Artists Find Tour of East No Longer of Necessity

The day of the dancer going to New York for her debut is over, according to Ernest Belcher, who has sent many terpsichorean artists to Broadway. It isn't necessary for an artist to go east any more to win recognition, in the opinion of the ballet master. Two reasons are given for this change. First, the sound films, and, second, Panchon and Marco.

"Many dancers developed here are now under long-time contract to the studios," said Belcher. "Their pay is good and they don't have to stand all the expenses of traveling to New York and waiting for an opportunity in the big city. Some of these dancers at the studios are already playing important roles and some have chances of winning stardom. There are probably nearly 1000 dancers receiving work at the studios. I doubt if New York can boast of this many trained artists employed at the present time.

"Panchon and Marco, too, have done a great deal to develop Los Angeles as a dance center," he continued. "The Fox circuit is the largest in the world and often a dancer can play nearly two years in the same act without twice returning to the same theater. It is safe to say there are at least 1000 local trained dancers now appearing with Panchon and Marco."

Belcher recalls a few years back when it was front-page copy when a Los Angeles dancer made a hit in New York or London. "Probably," he said, "it would still be front-page copy if there were any local dancers making their debuts in these cities."

REHEARSALS BEGIN FOR FALL FROLIC

Elsia Ryan Plans to Stage Unique Recital at Windsor Square Theater

These are busy days at the Elsa Ryan School of Dancing, in the heart of the Wilshire district. Miss Ryan is holding two rehearsals a week for her recital, which will be held at the Windsor Square Theater in October. The recital this year will be in the form of a musical comedy, "Full Speed," which was written especially for her by Peggy Clarken. Roland Paul has charge of the dramatic parts, while Miss Ryan is personally staging all the song and dance numbers. The entire school is taking part in this recital, according to Miss Ryan, and she has the largest enrollment for parts that she has ever had. Not only the regular day students are taking a tremendous interest in this production, but members of the Collegiate Club and the night business girls' classes are enrolling, according to report.

DANCE LESSONS AID TO BUILD BODY

A series of dancing lessons accomplishes the same foundation for those who wish to achieve beauty of body as does a foundation of Latin for those who are specializing in languages, according to Sammy Lee, dance director for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, giving a background of developed muscles which are beneficial for swimming, fencing, playing tennis or golf or for any grace-building exercise.

Tap dancing is the most popular modern method of procedure, as it shakes the body loose from any stiffness and quickly teaches one the rudiments of dancing.

OUR ARTISTS IN PERSON

NO. 3—THE VYSEKALS

BY ARTHUR MILLIER

Meet the Vysekals—Edouard and Luvena Buchanan—diminutive, complementary and unfailingly energetic; inseparable in life, art or newsprint.

The Vysekals

Edouard — round, chubby, with cherubic lips (they call him "The Cherub") always breaking into spontaneous smiles between his little red mustaches and Whistlerian goatee; Luvena, of equal height, but hewn in one piece as out of hard granite. Edward seems always on the point of cutting a caper on tiny, pointed feet; Luvena one expects at any moment to square up in best ring manner, fighting light in her eyes, capable fists clenched and working.

The resemblance between the artist and his work holds true again in their cases. Edward, whether painting the nude or the hills that rise below his studio, finds a series of elastic, swelling, almost bouncing forms. (Fellow artists, wishing to be uncomplimentary, sometimes speak of his "india rubber nudes.") And the light that breaks over his canvases is irrepressibly gay in color.

LUVENA FOR CHARACTER

Luvena, on the other hand, is all for character, searching out the particular little quirk in a nose or wrinkle round an eye that belongs to this and no other person. She leaves the light to her jolly spouse and goes after solid construction and rich color. No one who was fortunate enough to read the series of thirty-four "Little Portraits" which appeared in the Art and Artists' columns of The Times under the nome de plume of Benjamin Blue, during 1922, could possibly forget the observation, wit and malice with which that verbal short-order cook first broiled an artist on one side and then, inserting a sharp fork in his still white flesh, neatly flipped him over and browned him to a turn on the other. Benjamin Blue was none other than Mrs. Vysekal.

They are active elements in our art life, these two, whether as painters continually doing a new thing or carrying off prizes, as very active members of the California Art Club, or, in Edouard's case, as popular painting teacher at the Otis Art Institute, a post he has occupied since 1922.

Vysekal was born in Czecho-Slovakia in 1890. His father was a decorator (in a land of traditional folk - art) and young Edouard learned the rudiments of his craft in a practical school. He brought his merry disposition to St. Paul in 1907, decorated for a living and studied, going to the Art Institute of Chicago in 1909 and remaining there for five years, during the last two as an instructor.

MET LUVENA

It was in the Art Institute's school that he met Luvena Buchanan, painter, who was to prove his perfect complement. When Miss Buchanan received the commission to paint a series of historical murals in the Barbara Worth Hotel, then being erected at El Centro, she decided the job was too big for one lone woman and annexed a capable partner in the enterprise by marrying Edouard. After preliminary sketches done in Chicago they moved into a studio on the roof of the Imperial Valley hostelry, strung and prepared their canvas and painted the series of pictures, still to be seen there, in which the history of the valley is recorded with unusual exactness.

No mere approximations of history would do. Harold Bell Wright in particular stickled for exactness in a manner worthy of D. W. Griffith or Cecil De Mille. Thus one may see there the valley's first surveyor using the identical transit of his early days; the first farmer, the first school-teacher. Mr. Rockwood, who conceived the idea of the hotel, was hunted up and transported from Central Mexico that his true portrait might be included.

When the mural was completed our two "ironic romanticists," as they have been called, decided to stay in the West and took a studio in Los Angeles. War had brought hard times for artists and they lived through a hand-to-mouth period. Edouard put in a year designing sets for Hal Roach and Warner Brothers, then donned the fashionable army uniform and, when that became de trop, the pair painted diuramas in the State Exposition Building at Exposition Park, those landscapes filled with farmers, lumberjacks or oil workers that fascinate the children on Saturday afternoons.

EXTRACTED FUN

Out of everything they did these charming people extracted fun and never ceased to pursue their independent work as painters. Vysekal became a regular prize winner in the California Art Club exhibitions at the museum, his rich-colored, well-designed figure pieces often dominating the gallery by their force and personal quality. His work was never conventional, and despite the many careful studies that preceded each picture, had a spontaneous appearance that captivated juries and spectators. And Luvena, more sober and solid in her painting, would sometimes surpass her husband's accomplishment in a quieter portrait or still life.

Now, having weathered, they believe, their most difficult years, they have perched a house and a studio home of their own adjoining Antonio Moreno's "park" on one of the highest spots overlooking the western city. Sunset and Hollywood boulevards, long white ribbons of light, pierce the misty stretches toward the ocean. Mt. Hollywood, the Los Angeles river bed, the Verdugo Hills and the Sierra Madre range bound their patio and here Vysekal wrestles with the painting problems offered by the hills and valleys before him and his wife studies the sheer forms of her pet rubber plant between portraits.

Reviews and News of Art

Photographs for Himself

If you like the photographs of Edward Weston you will surely enjoy those of his son, Brett Weston, who has now set up his own studio in Los Angeles and is holding his first exhibition here at the Zeitlin Book Shop.

In the main they follow closely the lines of his famous father's work—how should it be otherwise when Brett learned his craft and developed his art in his father's workshop? There is the same interest in patterns of sharply selected detail—the roots of trees, the forms of rocks among beach pebbles, the curving lines of kelp, stones that suggest human forms, plants, flowers, all seen through the single eye of the camera and with no suggestion of the arts of drawing or painting.

Portraits of people also follow the paternal style, though these are gentler in spirit, without the peculiar impassioned vision that lifts the father's portraits into unforgettable isolation against their backgrounds. Brett does not reveal a similar eye for great form but he does discover beautiful linear composition.

To learn one's trade with such a great artist as Weston Senior has its advantages as well as its handicaps. As long as Brett follows that pattern he will inevitably be compared. When, like Edward, he manages to break through the tradition in which he grew up—in this case the tradition that grows out of his father's own vision—he may well turn out to be an exceptional artist. For even now, very young and only just leaving the nest that nourished him, he is well beyond the average good photographer, and, in certain of his prints, notably the picture of endless circular bay windows, in which Brett has caught one of the most characteristic of San Francisco's civic rhythms, he shows signs of an original trend that will be entirely his own.

Fine Local Bronze Cast

The beautiful figure of a young woman, modeled by Sherry Peticolas, young Los Angeles sculptor, which attracted such favorable attention when it was shown at the Los Angeles Museum this spring and was reproduced in these columns, has just been cast in bronze and is now on exhibition at the Dalzell Hatfield Galleries. It is one of the most graceful small figures ever made here and in its final metal state discloses new beauties impossible to the plaster model formerly exhibited. Here is a sculptor who will be increasingly heard from. Eugene Maier-Krieg's majestic head of "Atlantis" is also at this gallery, a powerful tragic mask of a face and this sculptor also shows there a charming small carven head, "Little Princess," in which he makes excellent use of artificial stone in two tones and textures.

Carosi Picture Here

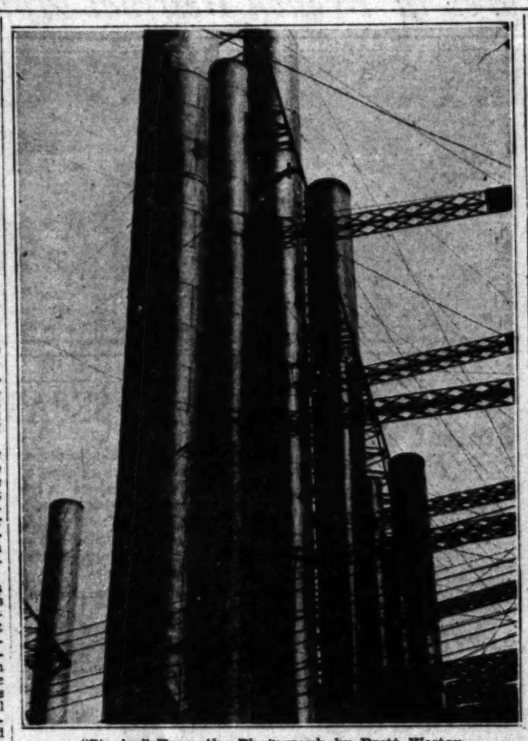
A Print Competition

All artists are invited to participate in a print competition, which will be held at the Cleveland Museum of Art under the auspices of the Print Club, March 15 to April 19. The exhibition will consist of unpublished prints, in any medium, from which a jury will endeavor to select one to be used as the Print Club publication for 1931. If any print is selected as suitable the artist will receive $1000 for the exclusive right to the plate, block or stone, not including the cost of printing an edition. For entry blanks and conditions write the Print Club, Box 3081, Station E, Cleveland, O.



"Stacks," From the Photograph by Brett Weston

Some time ago a correspondent complained that we reproduced pictures of machinery as art. Here is another, this time a photograph. Good cameramen are leading the way in directing our attention to what is beautiful in specifically modern structural forms. Brett Weston is exhibiting this week at Zeitlin's book shop.

BOOKS IN BEAUTIFUL FORMAT

PICTURESQUE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, 1811, 1812, 1813. A memoir on Paul Svinin. By Avrahm Yarmolinsky. William Edwin Rudge, New York.

It is treasure trove that Avrahm Yarmolinsky, head of the Slavonic department of the New York Public Library, and R. T. H. Halsey have found in the account of a sojourn begun in America in 1811 by a hitherto unknown Russian diplomat, artist and author. Dr. Yarmolinsky has dug up the facts on Svinin's life and Mr. Halsey has permitted the use of the water color reproductions of the drawings from Svinin's sketch book, which he secured by chance in Russia.

Copious extracts are given from Svinin's account of what he saw and thought of America. He admired the new country, saw in it a future ally of Russia, looked with fascination on its government, its numerous religious sects, its free education, its politics, its commercial genius, its steamboats and its enterprise. His survey of its fine arts alone makes his work of historical value.

His views of New York and of Philadelphia are now as valuable historically as pictorially.

RURAL SPORTS. By John Gay. Pictures by Gordon Ross. William Rudge, New York.

Most of us confine our acquaintance with the one-time court favorites, John Gay, to "The Beggar's Opera." Owen Culbertson in his introduction to this beautifully illustrated volume reminds us that Gay was fond of field sports, "the diversion of the fashionable and the ambition of the less favored." It is pleasant to read that "Rural Sports," published in 1713, "attracted the attention of the leading sportsmen of the time and made Gay a welcome guest at the finest country places in the kingdom."

In the same volume is "The Birth of the Squire" and "The Hound and the Huntsman," two short poems. Gordon Ross has caught the spirit of the poems in his drawings.

FAMOUS SPORTING PRINTS. Boxing. William Edwin Rudge, New York.

The sixth in a series of reproductions in color of famous sporting prints is devoted to boxing. Grozer's stipples and the aquatints by Charles Turner, Gleadah and Hunt are all notable, and the reproductions are excellent.

A PAGAN APPRAISES IRELAND

THE RETURN OF THE HERO. By Darrell Figgis. With an introduction by James Stephens. Charles Boni, Paper Books, New York.

Here we have another modernisation, for the work of Darrel Figgis, which raised so many questions of authorship when it was published in 1923 under the pseudonym Michael Ireland, is based on the twelfth century Irish "Colloquy of Oisin and St. Patrick." This splendid piece of writing is available now in the Paper Books series by A. and C. Boni.

For subtle satire and suppressed, irresistible Gaelic humor, the book is a masterpiece. And yet Figgis has dealt with an epic theme in a literary manner which precisely befits it. The dramatic qualities inherent in it are tremendous; a pagan from the age of heroes returns to Ireland to find a queer belief known as Christianity dominant. The people have changed, they have lost their heroic character; they fast instead of feast; they ring bells instead of clashing swords, and they pray instead of doing noble deeds.

When Oisin meets Padriac (better known as St. Patrick) the stage is set for an interplay of forces which is tremendous. It is criticism is made against the book it is that Mr. Figgis does not make enough of the dramatic possibilities of the scene. His handling, however, is subtle and light, and, furthermore, is beautifully executed. It is in characterization and dialogue that the book excels. The narrative is extremely simple. Twelve men are raising a corner-stone for a Christian church. Suddenly a young man on horseback gives them aid with supernatural strength and then disappears. Soon after an old, gigantic hero is heard to groan behind the group. Then Padriac appears in a church procession, the hero is led away to be instructed in Christian doctrine. The attempt to save the soul of this glorious pagan, 200 years removed from Padriac, forms the theme of the story.

Some of the more poignant expressions are worth repeating. Oisin utters wisdom when he replies to the monk: "Better have a woman for a comrade and listen to a poet's songs than praise them for what they are not and be cruel to them for what they are." In another place he says: "Wisdom is a beautiful shaping of life." W. G. P.

Gossip of the Book World

Devout Poems

Aura May Hollen issues from Hollywood an attractive volume of poems, mostly sixteen lines each, called "Songs of the Soul." They are all expressions of a devout nature that turns naturally to prayer and that finds in the inner life compensations for grief and pain. They are marked by a keen sense of rhythm and a feeling for harmony.

Fine Bookmaking

The 1930 "Southern Campus," the yearbook of the University of California at Los Angeles, is a splendid example of fine book making. It is reminiscent of the early manuscripts in its illumination, double column, typography and tome-like cover. Every design has been inspired by the decorations of the beautiful new Westwood buildings. It is edited by Fred K. Kuhlman and managed by Lloyd R. Bunch. It has 400 pages and carries pictures of over 3000 students as well as a complete story of the school's achievements for the year.

Sabatini Rides

Romance as written by Rafael Sabatini seems to be in the saddle. The Cosmopolitan is running his "Chronicles of Capt. Blood," the Mentor his "Stalking Horse" and the American his "King's Minion," which will be issued in book form by Houghton Miffin in September. "Capt. Blood" is in the talkies and in October Wagner will produce with Schildkraut the Sabatini play, "The Tyrant."

HOW TO WINE AND DINE IN PARIS. By Robert Forrest Wilson. Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis.

In "How to Wine and Dine in Paris" Robert Wilson gives what he says is intended to be a sort of spiritual preparation for dinner in Paris, by which the reader brings to the table the proper zest. Restaurants are considered as to their food, their interest for the tourist, their specialties and all the rest. The chapters were partly lifted from the author's "Paris on Parade."

LETTERING: MODERN AND FOREIGN. By Samuel Welo. Frederick J. Drake & Co., Chicago.

Printed in two colors on handcraft paper, the eighty plates of this new book on lettering are well designed to please the draughtsman, the art teacher, the advertising man. Features are stress on spacing, the use of foreign as well as of American styles of lettering and a great variety of alphabets.

The author designed the "Studio Handbook" and has had twenty-five years' experience as a commercial artist.

THE DECISIVE WARS OF HISTORY. A Study in Strategy. By Capt. B. H. Liddell Hart. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

When the strategic approach to the enemy has been indirect and thus unexpected, decisive results have been reached. This is the conclusion of Capt. Hart after a study of all the wars that have inflicted mankind. Beginning with the Greek wars he comes down through those of Rome, of medieval times and later, of the Napoleonic wars and those that followed, to the last and worst of all wars, and studies each from the point of view of the strategist.

THE AIR-TOURIST'S GUIDE TO EUROPE. By Capt. Norman Macmillan. Ives Washburne, New York.

Capt. Norman Macmillan is convinced that travel by air is the best way for the tourist who wants to see the most with least effort. He has at his fingers' ends all the information about the air map of Europe. He tells us that Germany is the heart of this, with lines reaching out to every capital. It seems therefore wise for the intending tourist to study these and other lines and to map out his trip according to his peculiar needs. Capt. Macmillan tells all that anyone need to know in regard to the rules and regulations, the routes and distances, and all the rest. Complete information about the airways of each country is given, with maps.

CAP'N BAILEY AND THE WIDDER DYER. By Charles W. Burton. Marshall, Jones Company, Boston.

Those who like dialect stories oozing with Yankee humor will be interested in "Cap'n Bailey and the Widder Dyer," which originated in radio talks by the author. The setting is Cape Cod, where the widow has a lobster lunchroom. When she cannot pay her note to the village skinflint Cap'n Bailey comes to her aid and thereby becomes her business partner. He adds a barn full of antiques, in which a strange-looking iron cat has its place. When this seemingly worthless object is discarded and carried away it is discovered to be the most valuable antique on the Cape.

The search that follows has mysterious quirks in it. A second story tells of the Cap'n's venture with baked-bean butter.

FILIBUSTER. By B. Dyke Asland. Robert M. McBride & Co., New York.

Johnny Carstone and Timothy Doon, cronies in their youth, are offered an opportunity to taste adventure to the fullest by undertaking a filibustering expedition to South America. Upon their arrival at their destination, with a taste of their future lot given in advance through partaking in a mutiny aboard the ship that carried them to the scene of their adventures, they become, respectively, El Filibustero and Don Timoteo.

In following the adventures of these two soldiers of fortune, ostensibly told by Don Timoteo, the reader will find enough thrills to last him for one happy evening. They are both veterans of the World War and seemingly inured to the dangers of battle, murder and sudden death. But in the tiny republic which they are sent to rescue from the hands of an unscrupulous military adventurer, they get a thorough drenching in thrills in their battle against cutthroats of a caliber that strain even their hardened abilities.

There is a very pretty romance woven into the fabric of the tale, which begins with an air of mystery that deepens as the plot unfolds.

PAPINI CREATES A SAINT

His Life of St. Augustine is a Pietistic Study That Reveals His Own State of Mind

BY LILLIAN C. FORD

ST. AUGUSTINE. By Giovanni Papini. Harcourt, Brace & Co., New York.

The author of the much-overrated life of Christ, now turns his attention to St. Augustine, in whom he sees marked resemblances to himself. The Saint had been a man of letters and lover of words, a pious seeker after philosophies with a bent toward occultism and a mind that had sought fame and honors, while living the life of a sensualist. In other ways Papini declares he is as much like St. Augustine as a vinegar plant is like a condor.

It was in his late youth that Papini discovered the "Confessions." At that time, he says, "I enjoyed what was human in them more than what was divine, but his romantic searchings of his own soul and his scathing and startling candidness took me by storm." He further testifies that in his struggle "to break forth from the dangers of pride and breathe the divine air of the Absolute," St. Augustine was of help. He now writes what he admits is a romantic biography. His purpose is to tell the story of a soul, to explain its journey from corruption to sainthood, during which the satyr was defeated by the angel in him.

Such a biography has little value as a study of Augustine and his period of transition from pagan to Christian. It is a pietistic tract made readable by the fact that Papini has imagination and poetry and fervor in his veins, along with a passionate religious conviction that borders on fanaticism.

14TH STREET: A Novel in Verse. By Percy Shostac. Simon & Shuster, New York.

In "14th Street" a "dark Jew with a sensitive, rather handsome face" tells the story of his frustrations. Obsessed by the married woman he loved and lost, he devotes half his book to telling of his intimacy with her and another half to the effort to understand and explain why he lost her.

He makes his purpose clear in the beginning, saying,

"Let me tell you plainly then
That this whole effusion is a belly-ache.
A belly-ache in my soul.
Be warned and quit while the quitting is good.
This first little flurry is nothing:
Wait till you hear the whole of it.
An orgy of myself;
All about me, the petty details,
My troubles, distresses, tastes.
Maybe thru saying it
The mess in me can be mopped up."

The effusion is probably sincere and possibly enlightening to other introverts who may find themselves in its pages. Comparing this auto-biographical so-called [illegible] poem, with James Oppenheim's "Mystic Warrior," commonest of sad falling-off in poetry can be. The Kurt Weise [illegible] are notable.

THE CRIME OF THE JUST. By Andre Chanson. Translated by Van Wyck Brooks. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

In the Cevennes Mountains, in Southeastern France, lived the Arnals on their land, "a kingdom made up of rye, of alfalfa, of trees pruned or marked for cutting." The head of the family was Councilor Arnal; him he had gathered his sons and grandsons, his nephews and their families, not to mention the various less important womenfolk. "All the Arnals, young and old, had to play the role of directors of conscience and deeds; people sought them out of Maubert, they stopped them in the fields."

When to them came disgrace through two of the councilor's grandchildren the family united to hush it up. They must protect their moral supremacy; must not let down the community that trusted them. To do this crime was necessary. They all participated in it. And from this came despair, disintegration, ruin. One by one and two by two the younger Arnals left Maubert. Those who remained could not keep it up. Fields went back to weeds, trees remained unpruned, crops ungarnered.

The councilor suffered remorse as did the others, a remorse so keen that it indicated a vigorous life. It was "the revolt of the heart and the mind seeking her purity."

How in time the will to expiate had its way and how the village that had trusted the councilor showed its faith is beautifully told in a story that moves forward steadily to a fine dramatic climax.

ENTIRELY fascinating personage in our midst is Julian [illegible], son of the famous novelist Hawthorne. Julian, now 85 years of age, is staying as a near-neighbor with his young wife. The author is still writing, still very modern in his ideas, with friends with piquant ones of the great contemporaries of his famous father, including the well known master of a style. It is in the northern part of the Owens Valley. It has everything, an airport, hotels, good stores, charming homes, miniature golf courses and everything, and yet manages to have a genuine personality of its own. I met numerous people there and they were all dears.

Excerpt from an English letter: "Your amazing Amer.cal John has just come over from California for the third visit in twelve years. Each time he has brought a new wife. We find it difficult to behave with proper decorum under these circumstances; so indecent to reminisce about former visits with other wives. What becomes of these ex-wives, dear? We liked the other two quite as well as No. 3. Is it possible that John is supporting them all and able to finance these expensive journeys as well? We dare not ask him, as you can imagine, but we are consumed with curiosity."

Remember Mary, my college girl mother of nine? Since they advised her to divorce her spouse, to get the State pension, things have scarcely improved. Ex-hubby was supposed to contribute, but, being out of work, is delinquent $400. So they are making her hale him into court and accusing her of shielding him from their wrath.

In the meantime she has been informed that it is unhealthy and unsanitary to let the children sleep together . . . why hasn't she separate beds and ten lots of bedding? Anyone who feels it is disgusting for Mary's nine to sleep together in four beds is at liberty to donate five cots and the necessary bedclothes. I'll gladly furnish the address on request.

Ironical world, isn't it?

Easily the prettiest, healthiest and most capable girl I have met lately is Marjorie Leonard of U.C.L.A., who annually works as dining-room director of the county's high Sierra camp. She is entirely charming. And such is her ability that she obtained the job of commissary manager for a cross-country scientific expedition in South America, discharging her duties with honor. Travel was by pack mules most of the way across the Andes.

Marjorie is the daughter of a college professor here and her family is camping a few miles from the county camp. She stays with them every night. A very handsome young Adonis is also staying with the family and Marjorie invites him over for the dances, when everyone casts fond, romantic eyes upon them.

World wanderers who are expected home during the next few weeks are Mrs. Marie Caystile, whose last letter was from Biarritz; Joseph Choate, last heard from from Paris; Mrs. F. P. Newport, last heard from from the south of France; Marjorie Dougan, last heard from in Egypt, and Mrs. Grace Wilcox Deitz, whose last address was London. Lillian Burkhardt Goldsmith is likewise Londoning and should return at the end of August.

An interesting sidelight on the supposedly hard times is that when one firm asked any of its employees who could afford to take an extra vacation without pay, to do so, three girls promptly took a European holiday and a dozen other employees gladly took from a month to six weeks. It was the chance they had been waiting for!

War Pictures Enter Realm of Burlesque

War and soldier films have reached the third and burlesque stage.

That is the opinion of Louis Sarecky, associate producer of Radio Pictures' "Leathernecking," a marine comedy with music.

"Shortly after the war," he said, "we had half-baked melodramatic efforts, technically irregular and romantically preposterous—especially to ex-soldiers.

"Now pictures of war and soldiers have come for entertainment's sake. These are for laughing purposes only, without giving offense to soldier or civilian. No attempt is made to follow army and navy regulations or to present a message for or against war," Sarecky concluded.

RESORT AND HOTEL NOTES

The notion that one must seek the ocean as the sole source of the popular sun-tan, was hit yesterday by Lloyd B. Austin at Tamarack Lodge in the High Sierras, when he pointed out that many of the guests at the famous Mammoth Lake hostelry are already nut-brown from the sun's rays.

A common sight, he states, is one or more automobile loads of boys and girls in bathing suits returning from their afternoon swimming and sunning at Horseshoe Lake.

Mountaineers no longer cling to the khaki of yesteryear, but appear in clothing giving exposure to the sun. A strange spectacle is a group of mountain sunshine enthusiasts tramping or riding across the snows on the slopes of the Mono County Sierras.

Fairview-on-the-Kern, twenty miles above Kernville in the Kern River Canyon, reports a busy vacation season. A number of parties are now camping at various spots on the river and its tributary streams having been packed in from Fairview by the Wortley Brothers, experienced wranglers.

Fishing is at its best in the district with the water clear and cold and the trout rising to the fly.

The advisable route to Fairview from the standpoint of time saving is by way of Mojave, Red Rock Canyon and Walker Pass. The trip may be made comfortably in five hours.

One of the outstanding features at the Black-Foxe Boys' Camp at Lake Elsinore, is the archery contests. The boys are divided into four classes and contests are held daily, with the result that the youngsters are becoming highly proficient with the use of the bow and arrow. Medals of bronze, silver and gold will be awarded at the end of the camping season to the winning team.

A gay and exciting season has been enjoyed by guests of Prescott's Inn, Soquel, Santa Cruz county. The last week has been replete with a unique bundle party, a big balloon dance, a hay-ride, a picnic luncheon, a toreador's ball, and other special features. There were several excellent programs given, including singers and dancers of special merit. Sylvia Hanson and some of her dancing pupils entertained.

Nature lovers from everywhere are guests of Valley Forge Lodge over the present week-end. Cherie DeVore, the owner of the lodge, has long been interested in making the West Fork of the San Gabriel a center for those who love the things of the out-of-doors. Following out that idea, she now plans to establish a nature trail and an out-door museum, in order that people may learn to read the trail side. The Southern California Nature Club and the nature study department of the city schools are co-operating, and the hope is to make it the finest thing of its kind in this section of the country.

The improved condition of all routes leading to the different entrances of Yosemite Park and the excellent manner in which all roads within the park have been maintained this summer, has established this locality as one of the outstanding motoring places. The dust usually found on the mountain roads inside of the park has largely been eliminated by extensive oiling and the construction of twenty-nine miles of paved highway on the floor of Yosemite Valley.

The park is now in full operation, with all trails and roads open. The six High Sierra camps, the Ahwahnee, Camp Curry, Yosemite Lodge the Glacier Point Hotel, housekeeping and the Mariposa Grove Lodge are proving popular stopping places with Yosemite visitors.

Surrounded by children and grandchildren, Mme. Ernestine Schumann-Heink, famed singer, spent several days recently at Warner Hot Springs, resting from recent vocal labors. Paul L. Stein, Pathe director, has returned to Hollywood from a continental vacation during which he studied the talking picture situation as it exists in leading European countries.

Psychiatrists Point to Films' Moral Uplift

Reformers may pick on the movies as being an unwholesome moral influence, but there are numerous psychologists and students of human behavior who defend them as a positive agency for the improvement of the race, according to Robert Lord, supervisor, and C. Graham Baker of First National studios. In fact, European psychiatrists have taken pains to cite the motion picture as a potent factor in moral uplift, and they submit cogent arguments for their stand, says Lord.

The cinema was the factor sadly needed to offset the effect of the mechanical age on human, mental and moral tendencies, these scientists point out. There was needed a substitute satisfaction for the adventure and romance of which this machine age deprives us, and the cinema is the most bountiful source of this substitute. What the effect of the haste and mechanism of modern business would have been upon men and women, had not the cinema come to provide a convenient and satisfactory safety valve for natural emotion, is pictured in unpleasant terms by psychologists, according to Lord.

The New in Stores & Homes

Novelties, Ideas, and Suggestions

By OLIVE GRAY

The old saying that "curiosity killed a cat" may mean that the cat was murdered for prying into its neighbor's affairs; but modestly, curiosity is the basis of scientific discovery, the foundation of exact knowledge, for curiosity is the incentive for investigation. Just where lies the line between vulgar curiosity, that which is indiscriminate "snooting," and the curiosity of beneficial knowing is a question to be answered by the individual conscience—and the high-class newspaper.

Cleanliness is Godliness

During these trying days of "usual" summer heat, and threatening disease, cleanliness puts a meaning into the aphorism "cleanliness is next to godliness." Health depends more than upon immaculacy in the home. The drain pipes be properly disfected, that the refrigerator, closets, all food containers hospitalically clean; that no breeding rubbish corners be allowed to go undisturbed; that the home be kept at as even a temperature as possible. All this places upon the homekeeper the responsibility of becoming a health provider. Hence may we extend the maxim that cleanliness is godliness, and this without irreverence.

Truly Tropic

You would know, first glance at the package, that it was a tropical product. A tube fashioned of bamboo and tied with a cord of the rough bark of the cocoa palm, this package at once attracts attention, arouses curiosity. Then the name, "coco-hones!" What can it mean? Something cocoanut, of course, and something "What-Not." Why, a novel kind of honey, one is informed. Said, by those who have used it, to be delicious as a "spread" on hot cakes, filling for cakes and short cakes, and to use wherever plain honey is relished. Many are buying these new tropical products to use the bamboo containers as hanging baskets on the porch, it is said.

Candle Snuffers

With the reinstatement of candles for the dinner table or for lighting the living-room on warm evenings old-time snuffers have returned. But, of course, as is the fashion with fashion, the new vogue presents a difference. The new snuffers are shaped like flowers, blossoming metallicly on long stems, the bell-shaped posies adjusting in the capacity of the snuffer. Gold color is preferred to the natural metallic tint one may have the flowers enameled in floral colors. Nice little hostess-gifts are these.

Rainbow Belts

With the return of the waistline long-lost to couture, belts have come into their own. New ones are of pleated organdy in many contrasting but harmonious tints. Since the feminine waist zone presents the interesting appearance of a miniature rainbow—that is, of course, when the zonee is properly "reduced."

Even Cookie Cutters

Even cookie cutters have a "color"; New ones — shown at the interesting Kitchen Shop are enameled—that is, the handles—to correspond with the color scheme of the other kitchenry. Thus the cutters related to the cookie jars which are to hold their products.

Summer Play

Vacation from school does not always mean vacation for parents since means of entertainment for the little ones is often a problem. One group of children in a certain suburb has taken to miniature golf—"pee-wee" golf, or mimic golf, or whatsoever name. The old orchard has been turned into a very real golf links, and the hazards are strange and interesting, being the clever imagination and ingenuity can suggest, from gardening implements to fruit crates. Any simple sort of play which keeps the mind busy and passes time happily is sure to make for good health. These miniature links, where a small group of children assemble, serve this purpose.

Purse Manicures

It is amazing to what diminutive proportions an entire manicure kit may be reduced. Some of the newest sets for carrying in the purse, contain every implement from scissors, reduced to pocket-book dimensions. Quite as complete as these tiny sets are they are, and always at hand, serve an excellent purpose. That they come in colors to match the purse or hanky, adds an esthetic note.

Forecast Hat

Fall forecasts in hats already are seen. One, most notable, was a black felt, quite broad of brim, banded in white pressed plush. The brim, also, was banded all around in the white plush.

Darn, Darn, Double Darn!

Even if you dislike darning as much as all that, you would find it a comfort having at hand that little darning set of string. Bust from one of those oriental colorings, the long cord, attached to a tassel, holds a number of darning spools in all the most useful colors. Thus does the useful article manage to find for itself a welcome position in the boudoir, mindful, too, of one's duty toward one's pleading hose.

Sunday School Lesson

The International Sunday School Lesson for July 27 is: "Deborah."—Judges iv and v.

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

Left-handed Ehud, who slyly stuck his sword clear through the fat body of the King of Moab; and Shamgar, who slew 600 Philistines with no other weapon than an ox-goad, were the predecessors of Deborah as "judges," or leaders, of Israel. So the reader of these quickening tales in the Book of Judges is justified in expecting plenty of action. And he is not disappointed; for those were stirring days wherein the Jews were becoming settled in the new land to which Moses had led them, and which Joshua had conquered.

Most silly notions, including the one that "careers" for women are a new discovery, are due to a lack of knowledge of history. We have had no modern women to match the figures of Deborah and Zenobia and Cleopatra and Elisabeth and Catherine. China's strongest ruler in the last fifty years was the late Empress Dowager. Russia's real revolution, which was usurped by the Bolsheviks, had for its outstanding and best-beloved figure, the venerable Mme. Catharine Breshkovsky, now an exile in Prague. History's pages, from earliest days until now, have been sprinkled with the shining names of great women.

A WOMAN PATRIOT

Deborah was not elected to her post of leadership. She simply displayed qualities of leadership, sitting under the palm tree down near Bethel that soon became known by her name; and followers rallied to her. The old meaning of the word king is "the man who can." Real crowns are for the competent, regardless of time, place, age or sex. Little fellows, like politicians, seek positions; big men, real statesmen, seek fitness. Every discerning reader of this story will catch the significance of the fact that Deborah became great in performance by first being great in capacity. Efficiency is a good goal for youth.

What made Deborah a national deliverer, and an immortal figure? Several qualities. She was interested in large concerns, and proved her interest by her devotion to near-at-hand tasks. She had good, sound sense, which is a better equipment than a college education. She was a community counsellor, the one to whom the neighbors turned in all their troubles; a type of woman common in every simple settlement. Steadily the circle of seekers after Deborah's wisdom grew, until it included all of Israel.

TWO ESSENTIALS

Such a woman, of course, possessed the two essentials of greatness, a sense of religious values and a deep patriotism. All the crowded cares of her vicinity, and the responsibilities of her own home, as the wife of Lappidoth, could not blind her to the larger needs of her country; and to the supremacy of Jehovah's honor in the life of Israel. This is the nobler side of every woman's social consciousness.

As she pondered and prayed, Deborah gradually drew into her hands the threads of information. Her palm tree stood on the high-road to Jerusalem; and she heard all the news from north and south; and took the measure of all men who might some day be called upon for leadership. Perhaps there is significance in the fact that she was of the Tribe of Issachar, of whom the Chronicler later recorded that they were men who had understanding of the times, and knew what Israel ought to do.

WOMAN WHO MADE A MAN

In Kipling's "Kim," a delightful old Indian woman is made to say: "There are only two kinds of women in the world: Those who take the strength out of a man; and those who put strength into him."

Far up in the hill country, north of Nazareth, dwelt a man named Barak, whom Deborah had marked as a possible leader of Israel against the oppression of the Canaanites.

When she felt that the hour had come to strike a blow for freedom, Deborah sent for Barak; for such was her prestige that the whole of Israel gave heed to her word. We get only a glimpse of the interview. Its burden was that this sensitive-souled seeress, this patriot, with a passion for her people, had been seeking the will of God for Israel; and she had received guidance to call upon Barak to lead the hosts of Naphtali and Zebulun to battle against Sisera. The hour had struck for breaking the power of the Canaanites; for God had assured Deborah that the victory would be to Israel.

Like Moses, when his call came, Barak hesitated. He feared to take the lead. So his name has come down the ages tagged with his reply to Deborah. "If thou wilt go with me, then will I go; but if thou wilt not go with me, I will not go." Pity poor, petticoated Barak; who might have won a great victory for Israel and for God in his own name and in his own might. Instead, Jehovah had to sell Sisera into the hand of a woman. Deborah would have been content to remain behind as an inspirer of a man; but Barak forced her into the active headship of the army, because he did not have quite the courage to assume responsibility.

So at Barak's call the patriots of Israel gathered to the beautiful slopes of Mt. Tabor, the symmetrical mountain which overlooks Nazareth, and which Roman Catholics regard as the Mountain of Transfiguration, having of late built thereon one of the loveliest churches in the Holy Land.

FLOOD OF PROTESTS EXPECTED

Tomorrow Last Day for Filing Tax Complaints With Supervisors

Tomorrow being the last day for receiving complaints, the Board of Supervisors, sitting as a board of tax equalization, will start its session at 8 a.m. in order that the swarm of protestants expected may be heard.

In commenting on the tax situation, County Assessor Hopkins declared it is essential that a law be passed at the coming session of the Legislature limiting the amount of tax or assessment against any parcel of real estate in any one year for any purpose whatsoever, except such as may be necessary for the acquisition and conservation of water or other extraordinary requirements.

The Tax Assessor added that there appears no doubt Los Angeles county came through the recent depression without loss of actual value and that the community is on the upgrade in the acquisition of new sources of wealth. There will be more favorable activity on the part of the real-estate buying public, he said, if there is assurance through legislation that levies of exorbitant special assessments will not be possible.

POLICE FIRE ENDS FLIGHT OF QUARTET

Suspects Held for Quiz by Hollywood Officers; Guns Found in Cars

Hollywood detectives are questioning four bandit suspects who were rounded up early yesterday by Officers Coleman and Shireman only after several shots had been fired as they fled.

Two of the men were discovered loitering in a parked car near Franklin avenue and Harvard Boulevard and one attempted to escape while the other was being handcuffed. As the driver stepped on the starter, one of the officers fired a shot which halted the flight. At this moment the officers saw two others in another machine. They, too, were captured after a short chase and all four were locked up on suspicion of robbery. A .45-caliber automatic pistol and another gun were found in the second car, the officers said, and another concealed on one of the suspects.

The four gave their names as Roy Emarias, 36 years of age, of 2930 Falling Leaf street; W. B. Griggs, 23, 2936 Falling Leaf street; Lewis Akens, 37, 4350 Gladden Place, and Kenneth Burke, 24, 916 West Sixth street.

Emarias and Griggs are next-door neighbors, police said, but they deny knowing each other.

Plans Laid for Reception to Noted Flyers

Initial plans for a celebration to welcome the four Hunter brothers, world's record endurance flyers, when they arrive here Tuesday, were formulated yesterday following a conference of Mayor Porter, Howard Hughes, film producer, and Sid Grauman.

Final details of the celebration to greet the championship quartet, who established the record of 553 hours in the air, will be completed tomorrow when Clyde Elliott, manager of the endurance flight champions, arrives in Los Angeles.

The flyers are scheduled to arrive here at 11 a.m. Tuesday, flying the City of Chicago, the record-breaking plane, and their fueling ship.

Selection has been tentatively made of Mines Field as the airport for the Hunter brothers' landing.

Woman Pioneer Placed in Grave

Following prayers at her late home, 2437 South Figueroa street, solemn requiem mass was said for Mrs. Magdalena Wolfskill Sabichi at 10 a.m. yesterday at St. Vincent's Church by Rev. John M. Leveille, assisted by Father Depta and Father Johnson. A eulogy was delivered by Father McCabe. Final prayers were said at the grave in Calvary Cemetery by Father McCabe.

Mrs. Sabichi, who was a lifelong resident of Los Angeles, died at her home early Thursday morning at the age of 84 and her funeral was attended by representatives of virtually all the pioneer families of the city, many of them serving as active and honorary pallbearers.

BOLTON FILES FINAL BRIEF IN HIS APPEAL

John Dewey Bolton, 26 years of age, yesterday filed his final brief with the District Court of Appeal in his effort to escape serving a term of life imprisonment for the murder of his wife, Lucille, while the couple were riding in an automobile on the Roosevelt Highway last winter. Evidence presented at the trial was insufficient to sustain the judgment, Bolton contends. The appellant also ascribes prejudicial error to the trial court. Bolton's defense at the trial was that his wife was slain by bandits.

VAST STRUCTURAL PROGRAM GAINS IMPETUS

Millions of Dollars to be Spent for Diversified Improvements During Coming Months

ENORMOUS SUM TO BE EXPENDED

Combined Major Projects for Six Months Listed

Outlay Involved to Exceed $225,000,000 Total

Public Work Large Factor in Construction Due

BY JAMES L. DAVIS
Real Estate Editor

Southern California workmen are looking forward to the prospect of more than $225,000,000 being expended in construction work just beginning or to start within approximately a six-month period. The total includes activity of all kinds, ranging building construction, street paving and highway work. The money is to be spent by the various governing bodies and by private individuals.

In a survey conducted by the Los Angeles Times, a partial list of projects contemplated in Southern California was compiled and this partial list reaches the enormous total of $224,940,677. In almost every case the amount specified for the work is either the contract price or the sum allocated for the work, the money being actually in sight for each project.

Estimates for possible private construction in large cities were not included in the list so that the total of work to be done will be far in excess of the figure stated. In Los Angeles alone, for instance, private construction work for the balance of the year probably will exceed $100,000,000 but as this is but an estimate, it is not included in the totals.

Chief among the projects are city street improvement jobs, bridges to be built, sewer work, State and county highways and similar projects included in the list is $20,000,000 available for the construction of dams in the San Gabriel Canyon. This money cannot be spent until a ruling on the legality of its use has been made, but it is expected that this will be accomplished so that work may begin within a few months.

Also included in the list is the $38,000,000 recently voted by Los Angeles citizens for water rights, lands and construction work in the Mono Basin. City water officials have not as yet allocated this money and it is yet to be determined how much will be spent for construction work and just when the expenditure will be made.

Among private projects included in the tabulation is the $7,300,000 auditorium, hotel and office building on Seventh and Eighth streets, the Hollywood Ritz-Carlton Hotel, the Fox Theater and office building on Broadway which is just starting, the Title Guarantee Building and the Pacific Bank Building on which construction is scheduled to begin soon.

Other private building work such as the Los Angeles Stock Exchange, County Hospital and other limitheight structures are not included in the list as work upon them is well under way.

FACT AND COMMENT

Certain sections of Los Angeles in which population and construction growth has been particularly marked in the past few years are neglecting one important development of city life—the establishment of small parks.

Other cities have such breathing spots scattered throughout their downtown and outlying business sections, but this matter seems to either have been neglected in Los Angeles or entirely forgotten, although parks have a favorably psychological effect upon visitors.

Hollywood is notably park poor. In the film capital probably more tourists gather than in any other part of the city and when our guests grow weary there is no quiet spot with trees and shrubbery close to the boulevard where they may go and rest.

Los Angeles may well take pride in her great commercial and population growth, but can take few bows because of her park development. Parks are an asset to any city and in Los Angeles particularly, more attention should be paid to them.

Realty Trends

The past few years have witnessed a decided trend toward the ocean, of realty buyers seeking cabins either for permanent residence or summer week-ends. Building figures of beach towns reflect this and a motor drive along the shore causes one to marvel at the development.

In coming years the trend is more likely to be in the opposite direction. Highways to the beaches now are crowded with vehicles and the traffic congestion detracts somewhat from the anticipated pleasure of the shore visit.

California's mountains and mountain lakes likely will be heard from during coming years. Already home building in the mountains is assuming

COUNTY TRANSFERS IN LEAD

Los Angeles Area Surpasses All Others in State in Number of Deals for Past Six Months

With total filings to the number of approximately 250,000 in Los Angeles county during the first half of the current year and with recordings aggregating about 600,000 in the fifty-eight counties of the State of California during the last six months, more than 40 per cent of the State's real estate activity is centered in this county, according to a State-wide survey made by the Security Title Insurance and Guarantee Company and based on recordings of instruments pertaining to real estate filed throughout the State.

In the fifty-eight counties of California, a total of 599,884 real estate instruments were filed from January 1 to July 1, while in Los Angeles county during the same period, there were 238,336 filings. An analysis of filing figures covering a period of years, shows that one-third of the instruments filed in the various counties involve actual transfers of property, while another third involve financing operations. On this basis, officials of the title company estimate that in the State as a whole nearly 200,000 transfers of property were completed during the first half of the current year, and that nearly 80,000 deeds were filed in Los Angeles county.

Alameda was the nearest competitor of this county during the first half of 1930, with a total of 42,411 instruments filed, San Francisco county was next with 36,081, less than one-sixth the total number of filings in Los Angeles county, and San Diego county ranked fourth in the State-wide survey with 31,125.

Half City Building Classifications Show Gains During Past Fiscal Year

OFFICE AND AMUSEMENT STRUCTURES TAKE LEAD

Decreases Recorded in Number and Value of Dwelling Permits; Factory Units Decline

Of thirty-three separate classifications of building permits issued at the City Hall, fifteen showed an increase for the fiscal year ending the 1st inst, as compared to the previous corresponding period, according to a report on activities of the city building department compiled by J. J. Backus, director.

Chief among the classifications which show an increase are office and amusement buildings other than theaters. Permits for the former increased 28 per cent and for the latter 54 per cent. Valuation of office buildings increased 299 per cent to $11,762,395, compared to $3,184,190 for the year 1928-1929. Amusement building valuations decreased from $182,065 to $120,725.

Dwelling permit classifications all showed decreases. Singles dropped 23.4 per cent to 4512, compared to 5894, valuation figures being $17,662,506 for the last year, compared to $23,309,280 for the previous year. Double dwellings decreased 30.9 per cent to 893, compared to 1294, with valuations $5,014,552 and $7,541,853, respectively.

Those classifications showing decreases follow: Airport, apartment and factory buildings, private garages, hospitals, mercantile buildings, poultry buildings, public administration and school units, sheds and outbuildings, workshops, wharves, foundations and other miscellaneous buildings and structures.

EXECUTIVE REPRESENTS CITY BOARD

G. D. Robertson Elected Vice-President of National Association

Los Angeles Realty Board, which has supplied two presidents to the National Association of Real Estate Boards, again has a ranking officer in the association with the election of G. D. Robertson as its vice-president.

Robertson, whose election to the post took place at the annual convention of the association in Toronto last week, has followed the real estate profession for the past twenty-five years and has been established in Los Angeles for seventeen years. He has been a member of the Los Angeles board since 1914, and has served on its board of governors and as its vice-president. He has been active in the affairs of the California Real Estate Association,, having been vice-president during 1929 and is at present a director-at-large.

President of the G. D. Robertson Company, he also is the head of the Monte Rio Corporation, vice-president and director of the Lincoln Mortgage Company, vice-president of the Wilshire Boulevard Association, director of the Bank of Italy and of the Los Angeles Orthopedic Hospital. His club affiliations include the Wilshire Country Club, Los Angeles Athletic Club and Wilshire Lodge, No. 445.

The local real estate board is also represented in the national association by Robert Baker, a director; Harry H. Culver and William May Garland, past presidents, members of the advisory board, and Tom Ingersoll, secretary of the advisory board.

Company Lists Week's Orders for Hoist Units

Continued expansion in Los Angeles industrial plants is indicated by equipment orders placed by a number of concerns during the past week.

Consolidated Steel Corporation, Ltd., reports orders for electrical hoisting units, including one fifteen-ton double girder, three-motor, cage-controlled crane of the high-speed heavy-duty type for the Southwest Welding Company, Alhambra; one ten-ton powerhouse type crane for the city of Pasadena, and two one-ton capacity high-speed Shepard hoists for the American Amusement Enterprises Company.

GAIN INDICATED IN ZONING LAWS

Adoption Movement Spreads Throughout Country

Zoned Territory Fast Adds Further Localities

Municipalities in All States Granted Authority

Indicative of the rapidly spreading movement toward adoption of zoning legislation in the United States for the protection of property owners and the beautification of communities, is the fact that this country now has a total of 856 cities, towns, villages, townships and counties with zoning regulations, according to a report received yesterday by Cecil B. Barker, general manager of the C. C. C. Tatum, Realtors.

The country's zoned territory has a population of more than 39,000,000 and additional localities are being added at a rapid pace, Barker pointed out. Of the forty-seven legislatures that met during 1928 and 1929, twenty-six enacted zoning regulations and 183 municipalities passed zoning ordinances in the same period.

The data received here are based on a survey of zoning laws completed recently by the Division of Building and Housing of the Bureau of Standards, Department of Commerce. The survey disclosed that zoning authority has been granted to municipalities in forty-seven States and in the District of Columbia, while in the State of Washington the general home rule provisions of the constitution have been construed to permit cities of the first class to adopt zoning regulations.

Among the 183 municipalities which adopted zoning ordinances during the past two years are five cities of more than 100,000 population. They are Cleveland and Youngstown, O.; New Orleans, La.; Dallas, Tex., and Spokane, Wash. Fifteen other cities of the same class amended earlier zoning laws during the past two years. On January 1, 1930, sixty of the largest cities in the country (100,000 population or more) had zoning ordinances in effect. Los Angeles is included in this group.

According to Barker, two constitutional amendments were proposed during 1929. One was an amendment to the Delaware constitution, authorizing the General Assembly to empower municipalities other than counties to adopt zoning ordinances. This was ratified in 1929 and now is in effect. The other is a proposed Georgia amendment to give counties the power to make planning and zoning laws.

major proportions. Road work in this direction each year is opening up new areas and making those that have been open for recreational purposes more accessible. The popularity of the mountains is becoming more pronounced and the future is bright from a home development standpoint.

True, the ocean has its lure and will continue to attract, but Mr. Average Businessman is beginning to long for more easily accessible recreational spots for his over-Sunday trip.

The Padlock Law

Owners of improved property may take a greater interest in the enforcement of prohibition following the increased use by authorities of the padlock law. Numerous cases in many cities have recently been reported where this law has been evoked and buildings closed for a year.

The owner of the property, often unaware of the real business conducted on his property, is generally the loser when this law is invoked and his building padlocked upon liquor law violations by the tenant.

If the latter is solvent and has a lease the property owner may collect his rent, but as usually is the case the liquor-law violator has no apparent resources and the building owner loses the revenue from the structure.

City's Best Period Seen in Next Three Years

Los Angeles residential construction for the first half of 1930 called for the building of 2884 homes of a permit valuation of $15,619,277, bringing the total cost of the 144,330 residential buildings erected since 1920 up to the total of $655,308,432.

This outlay for home building permits provided for 136,527 single and double dwellings costing $460,233,801 and 7803 multiples involving an expenditure of $196,094,631.

Based on building permits from records supplied by City Superintendent of Buildings C. J. Backus there are now 397,651 residential buildings in Los Angeles, 144,330 of which have been constructed during the last ten years.

ANALYSIS PRESENTED

A survey made by Gilbert H. Beesemyer, secretary-manager of the Guaranty Building and Loan Association, further shows that building permits have been issued for 2460 single and double dwellings during the first half of 1930, the average cost being $4122, as follows:

	No.	Valuation
January	327	$ 1,273,979
February	515	1,774,750
March	615	1,902,486

May	410	2,187,062
June	418	1,863,349
Totals	2635	$10,820,568

Since January 1 building permits have been issued for 259 multiples costing $5,742,038, an average of $22,170, as follows:

GREATER PERIOD PREDICTED

Predicting that the next three years will be Los Angeles' greatest period of home-building, the Guaranty survey states that California building-loan associations now have $436,859,541 of loans in force, principally on homes, the more than $500,000,000 resources of these institutions being adequate to meet all legitimate future home financing. More than 500,000 savers now have in excess of $500,000,000 in California building-loan associations. One-tenth of this number is registered with the Guaranty and affiliated institutions.

Investigation by Guaranty officials shows that 90 per cent of the saving by the 500,000 savers in California is done for a specific purpose. "To own a home" led the list of reasons for saving. Forty per cent of the savers own their own homes outright or are paying off mortgages on them. Most of the 60 per cent who do not now own homes are waiting only to accumulate more savings before starting. The majority of savers expressed a desire to design and build their homes and not to buy them.

It is estimated that 90 per cent of the savers are married, 6 per cent engaged, and 4 per cent single.

FILMLAND RANKS HIGH IN BUILDING

Hollywood Now in Fourth Place in State for Value of Permits

Hollywood's building construction program for the next five-year period will involve an expenditure exceeding $125,000,000, according to a survey made by N. P. Wilson, president of Hollywood Business Properties, Ltd.

Attaining a construction total of $81,120,997 since 1926, Hollywood now ranks as the fourth building center of California, with only Los Angeles, San Francisco and Oakland, all incorporated cities, exceeding the screen capital in construction expenditure during the four-year period, the survey states.

During the four-year period Oakland's total construction was $81,733,632, only $500,000 in excess of Hollywood's. In 1929 Hollywood's building permits exceeded those of Oakland by more than $3,000,000, placing the motion-picture center well on the road toward ranking as the third major construction area of California, the survey declares.

More limit-height construction is planned for 1930-35 than during any similar period in Hollywood's history, according to Wilson.

Combining expert selection and scientific management of desirable income properties for unusual earning possibilities

THE remarkable "buys" now available in the real estate market have caused many a person to say, "if I only had the money I would buy up heavily now."

The formation of the American Realty Syndicate, Ltd., and their offer of fully participating capital stock to the public in units as low as $50, now makes it possible for the small investor to participate in the unusual earnings resulting from a buyer's market.

American Realty Syndicate, Ltd., is the outgrowth of the operations of American Mortgage Company, one of the largest and most favorably known companies of its kind on the Pacific Coast. American Realty Syndicate, Ltd., was incorporated under the laws of California for the business of buying, selling, and operating income properties in the City of Los Angeles.

American Realty Syndicate, Ltd., now owns in fee four large, exceptionally desirable hotel apartment houses, three of which are in the heart of Hollywood, and one in the Wilshire district.

Earnings of the Syndicate from the operation of these properties show a net return on capital investment of 16.7 per cent per year. Even larger incomes are indicated for the future, due to expert selection of properties for purchase and their scientific management at minimum expense, coupled with the increase in real estate values predicted for Los Angeles.

The Capitalization of the Syndicate is 500,000 shares of Common stock, of the par value of $10 each. All of this stock has exactly the same rights and privileges and shares equally in all earnings and distribution of profits. There is no promotion stock. Shares are issued only for cash or its equivalent. In the opinion of Counsel this stock is exempt from personal property tax in California, and from Federal normal income tax.

Retail Trade Survey Shows County Richest Market in West

NEW YORK ONLY RIVAL FOR FIRST PLACE IN NATION

Expenditures of 1933 Predicted as Exceeding $1,130,000,000, Basis of Chamber of Commerce Report

BY CHARLES C. COHAN

Of the seven leading metropolitan areas in the United States, only New York stands between Los Angeles and first place in per capita income and per capita expenditures. Los Angeles county is the richest market in the West.

Approximately $952,000,000 was spent in Los Angeles in 1929 in retail trade and if the same percentage of increase is maintained in the next four years as occurred in the four-year period ending the first of this year, the total retail expenditures here for 1933 will be in excess of $1,130,000,000.

E. F. MacDONOUGH

These facts are predicated on recently completed studies made by the domestic trade department, Chamber of Commerce.

COUNTY'S TRADE BILL

According to a report made public yesterday, the first of the kind ever compiled for this county, Los Angeles county's retail purchases totaled $1,889,856,000 in 1929, the gross net spendable income of each resident in this county is $772, and the amount spent per person in retail purchases annually is $772.86. The report was prepared by E. F. MacDonough, manager of the domestic trade department, and embodies a trade survey made by Harold W. Wright, domestic trade commissioner, under MacDonough's supervision.

The four principal basic sources of income in the county provided, together making this aggregate bill, $1,000,000,000 in wages for 104,000 persons employed in 4215 industrial plants, with a total production value of $1,098,000,000; $250,000,000, conservatively estimated, from the tourist trade; $144,836,000 production value of oil, gas and minerals (Division of Mines report,) and a total agricultural and live stock production in excess of $92,138,000. Contributing to the growth and prosperity of these activities, was the more than $1,070,000,000 worth of business done through the harbor.

HOW MONEY SPENT

The people of this county, exclusive of Catalina Island, spent $722,790,000 for food last year, $401,538,000 for clothing, $240,925,000 for automobiles, gas and similar purchases; $214,153,000 for furniture and house furnishings and $120,450,000 for miscellaneous articles.

A total of 63½ per cent of each spendable income found its way into the channels of retail trade. Based on formulae developed by the National Bureau of Economic Research, the report shows that on the average, each individual spent 27 per cent, or $328.60 of his total retail expenditure, for food; 15 per cent, or $182.55 for clothing, 9 per cent, or $109.53 for automobile, gas and other like products; 8 per cent, or $97.36 for furniture and house furnishings, and 4½ per cent, or $54.76 for miscellaneous commodities.

The report details various ways and means as well as opportunities for the extension of trade here. In this connection it presents the importance of a more general knowledge here of commodities made in this region and points out possibilities for the manufacture here of furniture in the case goods line, certain kinds of tables, types of outing-flannel nightwear, very high grade and also low-priced lingerie lines, moderate-priced hosiery, ladies' sweaters, corsets, children's dresses and coats, medium-priced men's hats, neckwear, men's hosiery, men's belts, suits, and extension of the shoe industry.

"The activities of the Associated Apparel Manufacturers of this city in opening up the eastern market for Los Angeles apparel are to be commended as helping to protect this market from excessive exploitation," the report comments.

Completion of Work Foreseen in Steel Award

Early completion of the Lido Isle project launched by the Hugh Evans Company, developers, is foreseen in the award of a subcontract let last week to Consolidated Steel Corporation, Los Angeles, for the manufacture and supply of all the manhole covers and rings, sewer reinforcing steel and catch basins to be used at the resort.

The contract was let to the local steel corporation by the Griffith Company, general contractors on the project, which is one of the largest ever undertaken in Southern California.

Boulevard Buildings Undergo Alterations

UNIVERSITY STRUCTURE UNDER WAY

Physical Education Unit to Embody Many Advanced Features

Progress on the physical education and recreation building of the University of Southern California is well under way with all steel construction completed and practically all concrete poured with the exception of the roof over the swimming pool. The outside brick walls are being laid and construction will soon start on the inside partitions.

According to Prof. W. R. LaPorte, head of the department of physical education at S.C., the building is expected to be ready for use with the opening of school in September, and will embody the most advanced features of a structure to house a modern scientific program of physical education.

The building is being erected at the corner of Thirty-sixth and Hoover streets. Architects are John and Donald Parkinson. The builder is P. J. Walker Company. Two swimming pools, quarters for the student health service, classrooms and offices of the combined men's and women's departments of physical education, locker and shower rooms for varsity teams, specially equipped rooms for sports such as fencing, archery, handball and rifle practice, a studio for dancing and rhythmics, several small gyms for apparatus work and corrective exercises, a patio garden, lobby and a roof garden equipped as solaria, are to be included in the structure.

Building-Loan Association to Be Established

SIERRA MADRE, July 19. (Exclusive)—Plans have been received by Jack Paschall and W. R. Humphries, who have announced the directorate of the association, although a name has not been definitely decided upon.

JACK PASCHALL

The association is incorporated with a capital stock of $75,000 and offices will be located on Central avenue, east of the Sierra Madre Hotel.

Paschall, who has been elected as president of the association, is general agent of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company. Lester K. Layton, local Councilman, is vice-president, with Humphries as secretary. On the board of directors are H. E. Allen, president of the Sierra Madre Savings Bank, Councilmen H. Clay Reavis and Layton, and Humphries and Paschall.

Humphries will conduct his realty business in the association offices, and announces that display room will be devoted to modern kitchen equipment and home conveniences.

Company Lists Sales, Leases of Recent Date

Sales and leases aggregating $506,000 and recently consummated by the Home Realty Company are announced by R. W. Wheeler, president, as follows:

Cash sale of a 50-foot site on Normandie, near Melrose, to W. Shunborn for apartment building; sale of store and office building at southeast corner of Fair Oaks and Colorado, Pasadena, for D. C. Bear & Son; also 50-foot business lot on North Brand, Glendale, to Hadep Bear.

Leasing of the second floor of the Belmont office building, First and Vermont, for the Bimini Income Properties, Inc., to the Prudential Insurance Company, for a term of years. Also the leasing for Messrs. Brown and Muskat of 110 feet of frontage on Second street at Fremont, and the northwest corner of Vermont and Rosewood for gas service stations; also the leasing of a restaurant building at Third and Vermont for J. J. Warrick.

Sale of 130 feet of Beverly Boulevard business frontage at the northeast corner of New Hampshire, for Mrs. W. Wilhelmina; and sale of a twelve room house on half-acre site at the corner of Fair Oaks and Tremont, Altadena, for Mrs. Lulu Goodman.

Eastern Hotel Official Named Local Manager

Appointment of Maj. B. F. Jolley, hotel executive, to the post of general manager of the Garden of Alla, was announced yesterday.

Maj. Jolley comes to Los Angeles from Washington, D. C., where he was general manager of the Ambassador Hotel. Prior to that, he was managing director of the Webster Hall Hotel of Pittsburgh, Pa., a 700-room hostelry. In 1916, he was assistant manager of the Knickerbocker Hotel in New York City.

The Garden of Alla is situated at 8152 Sunset Boulevard and includes a group of individual villas.

BERTH TO BE IMPROVED

The Los Angeles Harbor Department has awarded the contract for the improvement of Berth 181 to the Osborn Company of Pasadena at a price of $18,426. Asphalt paving will be involved in this improvement, which calls for the use of approximately 100,000 square feet.

INVASION OF DOWNTOWN AREA SEEN

Miniature Golf Courses Begin to Occupy Business District Sites

Possibility of invasion of the downtown business section by miniature golf courses, with a view to catering to residents of downtown hostelries and the theater-going public, was revealed yesterday in a study made by officials of Consolidated Hotels, Inc., operators of more than 110 hotels and apartment-houses here.

The first downtown miniature golf links has been opened in the basement at the southeast corner of Seventh and Broadway, and now is played by more than 250 persons daily.

Establishment of this first downtown course is expected to be followed by the opening of many others, according to the hotel chain executives, who pointed out that this is a logical trend for the movement to take. Similar courses are said to be planned for several downtown hotels. An outdoor miniature golf course now is under construction at Figueroa and Tenth streets, and realty men report demand for sites even nearer to the heart of the business section.

Two Downtown Leases Listed as Negotiated

E. Phillip Lyon of the H. Lew Zuckerman Company, reports the closing of two leases in downtown Los Angeles. The Norton Estate property at 609 to 619 South Broadway, which is under ninety-nine-year lease to the Fox Chicago Realty Company will house two chain-store concerns.

Zuker's Dress, Inc., will occupy twenty-five feet of Broadway frontage and the Fashion 15 Bootery will occupy twenty feet. These stores will be adjacent to the theater entrance on the north. The building is now under construction. The term of both leases is for fifteen years. The total rent to be paid is reported to be approximately $1,500,000. E. P. Lyon and H. L. Zuckerman represented all parties involved.

Construction of Skyscraper Breaks Record

All-time skyscraper construction records are being established in the erection of the second limit-height unit of the Bank of Hollywood Building, Hollywood Boulevard and Vine street, it was announced yesterday by Sam Kress, president of Hollywood Central Building Corporation, and by G. R. Dexter, secretary.

SAM KRESS

With construction of the Class A unit started on June 1, the concrete work on seven stories already has been completed and the contractor is ready to start on the eighth story. This is at the rate of almost a story each week, Kress said. At the present rate of construction the building will be ready for occupancy early in December. Revised plans provide for 320 offices in the two-unit structure, giving it more office capacity than any limit-height building in Hollywood. With the present building 100 per cent occupied, many reservations are already coming in for the new unit, Kress said.

CHAMBER PLANS DRAWN

TULARE, July 12. (Exclusive)—Plans have been drawn for the new Tulare Chamber of Commerce office building at the Tulare county fair grounds, R. C. Sturgeon, chairman of the chamber's building committee, reported at a recent session of the chamber directors.

Rock and Sand Contract Let

STORE ALTERATION RUSHED

Washington-Boulevard Project Causes Extensive Repair Work to Many Structures

In preparation for the widening of Washington Boulevard to 100 feet between Figueroa and Alameda streets, property owners on the north side of the artery are spending approximately $250,000 on setting back their structures twenty feet and remodeling and modernizing facilities throughout, as revealed by a study of the alteration work yesterday by Clarence Urban, president of the Washington Boulevard Association.

The four-story hotel, apartment and store building at the northwest corner of Washington and Main is the largest of the alteration projects, calling for an expenditure of more than $40,000. The structure, owned by the Morton Investment Company, has had twenty feet, one inch cut from its Washington frontage and an entire new exterior is being constructed. Architects Edward Cray Taylor and Ellis Wing Taylor handled the alteration design and supervision, while the K. R. Bradley Construction Company has the general contract. Completion of the job is scheduled for October 1, next.

Other setback and alteration projects include the two-story building at the northeast corner of Figueroa and Washington, the adjoining two-story building, a one-story structure containing eight stores at the northwest corner of Washington and Flower, a two-story building at 335 West Washington and several smaller jobs. Work has just been completed on alteration and setback of the one-story structure at the northwest corner of Washington and Santee street, which is owned by Katharine M. Johnson. Work is under way on setting back and altering a two-unit structure owned by the Central and Pacific Improvement Company, occupying the northeast and northwest corners of Washington and Broadway. S. N. Benjamin is the general contractor on this job and William Kernan is the architect. The building, formerly a single structure containing sixteen stores, now consists of two units, one containing seven stores and one six stores. Work is to be completed in about three weeks.

Coincident with his survey of the alteration work, Urban has made a study of the store vacancy situation along Washington Boulevard from Alameda street to the Culver City boundary at Adams street, a distance of 9.1 miles. The study revealed a total of 1051 storerooms, exclusive of those in the buildings being remodeled and set back, and a vacancy of only 7.2 per cent.

"We consider this small vacancy, only seventy-six out of 1051 storerooms, as evidence of the steady demand for store space along the boulevard and especially significant in view of the fact that at least a dozen store buildings have been erected since the first of the year," the official said. "Approximately 75 per cent of all store buildings on the thoroughfare have been built in the last ten years."

BUILDING TO HOUSE CAFE

BURBANK, July 19.—A building permit was issued during the week to Jeanette Gilbert and associates for the erection of a brick building at Olive avenue, between Maple street and Pass avenue, opposite the First National Picture studios in San Fernando Valley. The structure is to cost $3000 and is to house a restaurant.

CONSTRUCTION PLANS QUESTIONS ANSWERED

HOUSE PLANNING FOUND PROBLEM

Judge in Magazine Contest Expresses Views

California Provides Most Inspiring Examples

Entries to Be Exhibited for Next Two Weeks

The most difficult problem in architecture is the proper planning of a small house, asserts judges in the third annual small-house competition conducted by the House Beautiful Magazine, entries in which are to be exhibited beginning tomorrow and until August 3 in the Architects' Building Material Exhibit at Fifth and Figueroa streets.

"The material presented in this competition was of surprisingly high quality," Robert P. Bellows, Boston architect and member of the committee of judges, declared. "It is heartening to know that such excellent work is being done all along the Atlantic seaboard and in California. That the vast country between was practically unrepresented is somewhat surprising.

"By all odds, the most inspiring and beautiful photographs came from California. White walls, luminous shadows and natural surroundings all conspired to produce loveliness. But there was also a high order of intelligence and taste shown in almost all of these California houses, in their design, plan and setting. No other one region represented made such a general showing of excellence. One lesson learned from the competition is that the East must look to its laurels. Another is that the ladies are challenging their brother architects in the design of small houses."

Included in the exhibition of photographs that opens tomorrow will be the two prize-winners designed by Raymond J. Percival of Hartford, Ct., and S. Arthur Love, Jr., of Philadelphia; six highly commended designs which include the work of Mrs. James Osborne Craig of Santa Barbara, Gordon B. Kaufman of Los Angeles and Marston and Maybury of Pasadena; eleven honorable mentions, among which are found the work of John Upton Cutter of Stockton, Kirtland Cutter of Long Beach, H. Roy Kelley of Los Angeles; Soule, Murphy and Hastings of Santa Barbara, Heth Wharton of Los Angeles, Witmer and Watson of Los Angeles, and twenty-two selected designs.

Realty Women Plan Meetings

The women's division, northern area, of the California Real Estate Association will meet in Oakland August 15, according to Grace Perego, San Francisco, chairman. Willie May Bridge, Oakland, will preside.

Women of the southern area will meet at the Royal Palms Golf Club, San Pedro, on September 12. The delegates will convene at 10 a.m. and the session will continue through luncheon, Naomi Elizabeth McCann, North Hollywood, chairman, has announced. Beatrice E. Hards, San Pedro, regional vice-president, will be chairman of the day.

HOME PLAY MOVEMENT LAUNCHED

Civic Organizations Start Endeavor to Encourage Backyard Games

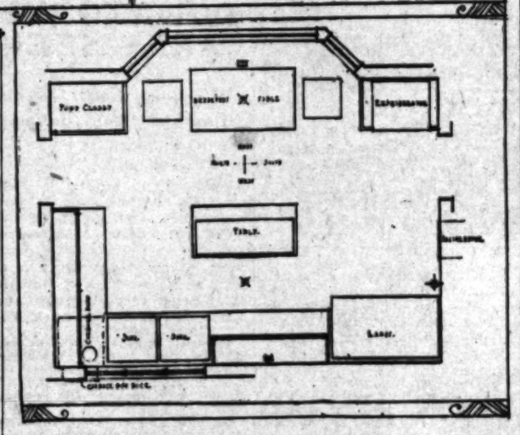
With development of the home as a complete recreational unit for the use of the entire family as its object, a city-wide "home play" movement has been launched by educational, recreational and civic organizations of Los Angeles, according to the announcement of Glen O. Grant supervisor of community recreation in the City Playground and Recreation Department.

Parents throughout the metropolitan area are being enrolled in a free Home Play Club, and will later receive demonstrations and bulletins on methods of developing backyard playgrounds and other play equipment. Information on practically all types of home recreation has been prepared and will be distributed free to those joining the club or otherwise making such request.

So that those interested may find out details in their own districts, 457 stations have been designated as places where information, enrollment cards and other data may be obtained. These include 227 Parent-Teacher Association presidents, 110 school playgrounds, forty-one municipal playgrounds, forty-nine public library branches, and thirty others.

Because the tendency at present is for families to scatter in search of recreation, the "home play" movement is seen as a plan making for better family unity and understanding, following the slogan, "the family that plays together stays together." By developing the home as a playground for small children, many youngsters are expected to be kept from playing in the streets or other dangerous places.

Besides the organizations named above, the plan is also being sponsored by the Los Angeles Federation of Women's Clubs, County Probation Department, Catholic and Jewish Welfare Federations, Los Angeles Girls' and Boys' Councils, Southern California Council of Religious Education and other civic organizations.



West-Side Scheme Commended

The above design by Mrs. Florence Rathburn, 1253 Berkeley street, Santa Monica, was awarded second prize in the housewives' division of the Perfect Kitchen Competition sponsored by the Architects' Building Material Exhibit at Fifth and Figueroa streets, in whose display rooms this and other entries may be examined.

KITCHEN PLAN WINS AWARD

Modest "Home Laboratory" Features Double Sink Between Garbage Chute and Work Cabinet

Second prize in the housewives' division of the Perfect Kitchen Competition, sponsored by the Architects' Building Material Exhibit at Fifth and Figueroa streets, was awarded to Mrs. Florence Rathburn of 1253 Berkeley street, Santa Monica, for the design shown on this page.

Mrs. Rathburn has designed a kitchen for the modest home costing considerably less than $30,000. The judges declared themselves pleased with this plan because of its simplicity and workable arrangement. The scheme of the west side was found particularly noteworthy. It is routed so that the double sink is between the garbage chute and the work cabinet. After obtaining the food from the ant-proof cooler and carrying it the three steps across the kitchen, it is possible to do the preparing and cooking without leaving that side of the room. The location of the range, adjoining the work cabinet, is declared the utmost in cooking efficiency. The incinerator is accessible to the sink, cabinet and range, the garbage is emptied from the outside, the refrigerator is directly across from the range and conveniently located for the serving of the breakfast table, and the kitchen is equipped with electric ventilation.

The competition was held for the purpose of stimulating an interest in better arranged and better equipped kitchens, and prizes were offered to architects and housewives so as to obtain from both groups their ideas of what a perfect kitchen should be.

The 200 designs submitted in the competition are now on display in the Architects' Building Material Exhibit at Fifth and Figueroa streets.

STUDY OF CONTRACT STRESSED

Real Estate Commissioner Urges Property Buyers to Watch Agreements

The State Real Estate Department of California scrutinizes contracts of purchase and sale, leases and conveyances, used by land subdividers and frequently persuades changes in their terms, but unscrupulous sellers sometimes employ vicious, unfair and loosely worded contracts, according to a statement by Commissioner Stephen Barnson to the California Real Estate Association. Prospective purchasers are advised to study carefully all contracts before signing.

Among examples of detrimental clauses found by the department are:

Seller reserved right to interplant the trees with truck garden for three years to his own profit. Several paragraphs further on it was set forth that purchaser should pay for all water applied to the land.

Another declares purchaser automatically forfeits any and all claim to the property or to any equity therein should he record the agreement prior to his having paid in full for the property.

Another resorts to selling lots with promise of customary street improvements and water mains, but omits dates of commencement or completion of such installations.

Home Building Permits Lead

BURBANK, July 19. (Exclusive) Home construction led building work in this city during June. J. Wake Hunt started erection of a $11,000 residence, and twelve other permits for homes costing upward of $5000 were issued. There were four homes costing $4000, two costing $3000 and one involving $2000.

HOME FINANCING EXPLAINED

Plan to Be Followed by Properly Owner Desiring Additional, Junior Loan, Outlined

BY GEORGE A. SCHNEIDER

Prepared for the California Building-Loan League

[Copyright, 1930, by George A. Schneider]

[This is the twenty-first of a series of article designed primarily for the home owner of moderate means.]

The best plan to be followed by the owner whose property is subject to an existing loan and who requires additional financing, will, of course, depend upon circumstances.

The first and logical thing for him to do is to consult with the owner of the first loan. Perhaps the instrument of security may provide for additional loans, and if the equity of the borrower is ample, the lender may be willing to advance the amount required. If the instrument of security does not provide for additional loans, then a new mortgage or deed of trust would be required to cover any subsequent loan. If the owner is unable to borrow from this source, he must try any of the soucres of second money that are available, or he may be able to borrow a sufficient amount on a new first mortgage to cover his additional needs and pay off the first loan. In following this plan, the owner must not overlook the expenses incidental to the completion of the new loan and the paying off of the existing one. Very often he will overlook several items of expense and the amount he has borrowed will fail to be sufficient. This often leads to a considerable amount of trouble.

PRECAUTIONS FOR BUYER

Transactions of this kind are almost invariably closed through an escrow, and it would be prudent for the borrower to have the escrow holder make a careful estimate of the expenses involved, so that he may make sure the amount remaining after paying off the first debt and all expenses incidental to closing the loan will be sufficient to meet his needs.

When the buyer is purchasing property subject to an existing mortgage, and is not paying in cash up to the amount of the mortgage, the seller will often be willing to accept the difference between the amount of the mortgage and the cash payment in the form of a note secured by a purchase-money deed of trust. This is a common way of handling the financing under such circumstances.

Under this plan the buyer should be concerned in three matters in particular. First, he should be sure to get all details as to the terms of the existing mortgage. Next, he should insist upon a subordination clause being incorporated in the purchase-money deed of trust, provided the date of maturity of the note secured thereby will extend beyond the date of maturity of the existing mortgage. Third, he should ascertain to what extent financing charges are included in handling the junior financing in this way. Of course, in some cases, the seller will keep his note, since it may represent all or part of his profit in the sale. Again, he may intend to sell it at a discount immediately and in fixing the price and terms of sale may have included in the price a sufficient amount to cover the discount. In such instance, the buyer is indirectly paying the cost of financing the second lien.

AMORTIZED BASIS

As a rule junior loans are made on an amortized basis and are invariably secured by a deed of trust rather than a mortgage. Notes for this purpose customarily bear seven or eight per cent per annum. Discounts for second paper of this character will vary according to the locality, the demand for funds, the risk involved, the length of the loan period, and the terms of the first debt. These prevailing discounts are about as follows:

Notes maturing in:
1 year.	8-10%
2 years.	12-15%
3 years.	18-20%
4 years.	20-25%
5 years.	25-30%

Many persons or firms dealing in second paper will not buy it if it is second to a deed of trust, and most of them object to a subordination clause in the second paper. Furthermore, few of them will buy second paper where the first is on an amortized basis.

ROCKS KEEP ROOF IN POSITION

Swiss House Built in Southland Hills

Novel Santa Barbara Dwelling

ONE of the interesting new homes in Santa Barbara is the Swiss house, adapted to a California setting, of Mrs. Charles S. Dennison, widow of the late head of the Dennison Paper Company.

Plans for the home were drawn by Russel Ray, local architect, who conceived the idea of combining all of the features of a Swiss peasant mountain home for a California residence on a hill.

The home is constructed entirely of wood, typically Swiss. Rocks are used to hold strips which in turn actually keep the redwood shake roof in place. The California adaptation is carried out in detail and ornament. The ornaments carved in the wood balconies, the shutters, the doors and fence are of indigenous character, being palm trees, live oaks and Indian tepees. The gables are in naturally brilliant desert colors of yuccas, artichokes and flowering cacti. The native Swiss house gables carry colored designs of local interest, according to Ray. The exterior is painted in a driftwood white to conform with the white stucco houses here.

The interior of the house is completely finished in knotted pine, even to the kitchen where the wood has been scrubbed and polished until it is white. The wrought-iron ornaments carry western designs, ram's heads, Indian tepees and palms.

PLAN STRESSES COMPACTNESS

Arrangement of Rooms Aims at Convenience

Garden at Rear Would Form Center of Interest

Architect Suggests Stucco Exterior Finish

The house herewith illustrated, designed by John J. Landon for the Community Arts Association of Santa Barbara, is small and compact, and, in frame construction and plaster exterior, could be built very economically, according to the architect. Its floor plan is worked out to this end, and the arrangement of the rooms aims at convenience.

The hall serves as a connecting medium and through it one can reach any of the rooms of the house. A garden at the rear would form the center of interest of the entire scheme, and the major rooms open out toward it.

The architect's specifications suggest that the exterior be finished in rough stucco, and the windows and door trim be painted the same color. The sash could be some bright color, green, orange or blue, the roof and rafters tobacco brown with sawn ends painted with bright clear vermillion.

The house can be placed on a fifty-foot lot and the building cost could probably be kept within $3000.

LOAN FUNDS DECLARED AVAILABLE

Legitimate Home Building to Receive Ample Support, Executive States

Ample building-loan funds will be available for legitimate home building in Los Angeles, Frank M. Wise, secretary of the United States Building and Loan Association, said yesterday in predicting an unusually active fall period of residential construction.

FRANK M. WISE.

There is a heavy accumulation of funds in California building-loan institutions and in the banks, a condition which invariably precedes a period of intensive building construction, Wise declared, in pointing out that the rate of call money recently reached its lowest level in eleven years.

Resources of the Los Angeles building-loan associations have registered tremendous increases during the first half of the July period, the gain of the United States alone reaching almost $500,000, Wise asserted, in stating that this rate of gain would put the United States' resources well beyond the $8,000,000 mark on August 1.

Heavy gains in savings accounts are reported by the ten offices of United States, which extend from San Francisco to San Diego, indicating a State-wide increase in savings, Wise declared.

Additional Unit to Be Started at High School

VISALIA, July 19. (Exclusive)—Construction of an addition to the science building of the Visalia Union High School, part of the building operations provided for by recent floating of a $210,000 bond issue, will start soon, according to DeWitt Montgomery, city superintendent of schools. This building is expected to be ready for opening of the fall term.

Later erection of a new classroom in the rear of the present main building and to the east of the science building will be undertaken. This building should be completed by Christmas, according to Montgomery.

Painters Give Job Pointers

Paint should be applied only when the surface is thoroughly dry. All surfaces should be clean, smooth, free from dust, dirt, grease, mortar, loose paint and scales, expert painters advise.

On new work before priming, knots and sappy streaks should be shellacked with one coat brushed out thin. All gloss paint should be pure white lead mixed with pure linseed oil, pure turpentine and dryer. Flat paint should be of a white lead mixed with flatting oil.

All exterior work should dry from two to four days before the next coat is applied. For interior work at least twenty-four hours' drying time should be allowed for each coat. Walls that have been calcimined should be washed until all calcimine is removed before applying any paint.

MAC-MAR STEEL FRAME

for a house in Los Angeles

Here it is—nearly finished—the first Mac-Mar steel house-frame in this city. In a day or two it will be ready for its outer shell of stucco. But before that outer shell is put on, before the ribs of this basic framework are concealed from you, come and inspect them, examine them, see for yourself what Mac-Mar Steel Framing, the modern method of construction, really means to home builders.

Note its flexibility, its supreme adaptability to any style or type of architectural design. Whatever house you may be planning, you will find Steel Frame construction perfectly applicable.

Note its absolute rigidity and permanence. It is all steel—and that will not settle, sag, or cause unsightly plaster cracks in the finished house.

Look at those steel spans against the sky. A frame that fire cannot raze — that wind or storm cannot harm.

Realize, too, how much higher the resale value of that house will be in the future—the investment protected by sturdy, enduring steel.

It's almost erected. Don't fail to see the first example in your city of this most modern and economical construction — Mac-Mar Steel Framing.

This Steel Framing is being furnished for the new home of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Haeckel, well known designers and weavers of "Haeckel Weaves" hand woven tapestries and fabrics.

The building is at 3533 Carnation Avenue, just south of the Manor estate. Directions: If you are coming into the city from the north take down Griffith Park Boulevard, or, if you are coming from the East, South or West, take Sunset Boulevard to Griffith Park Boulevard. The first street that crosses Griffith Park Blvd., north of Sunset, is Edgedale Drive. Go East on this street, which runs into Carnation Ave., and follow Carnation to the top of the hill. Contract for Station Given TEMPLE CITY, July 19. (Exclusive)—Plans for the erection of a building for the Temple City Sheriff's substation, to cost $7000, were announced today by Capt. Ray M. Conly. The building will be one story and will be located at the northeast corner of Las Tunas Drive and Cloverly avenue. Axel Oleson, local contractor, has been awarded the job and construction will begin at once. The station will be ready for occupancy in October.

HOUSING SHORTAGE SEEN

Executive Predicts Present Decline in Residential Construction Soon to Have Effect

If the present decline in residential building operations continues for another year, the United States will face a shortage of houses in 1932 and building commodity prices will, as a result, probably reach new high peaks.

This was the opinion voiced yesterday by Ford J. Twaits, president of Consolidated Rock Products Company, Los Angeles, following receipt of advices that residential construction throughout the United States for 1930, to June 20, has fallen behind the figures for the corresponding period of 1929 by nearly $500,000,000. A similar shortage in nonresidential structures will also be faced, the decline to June 20, 1930, in this class of construction being more than $110,000,000, or 9 per cent compared with the first half of 1929, Twaits said.

F. J. TWAITS.

Only in the class of public works and public utilities has an increase been shown in 1930, this year's operations in the nation exceeding the volume for the first six months of last year by just over $110,000,000, or approximately 20 per cent. This exception is not true, however, in this locality where public works and public utilities are considerably behind in their regular construction program, the executive declared.

"Those who contemplate building in the near future would certainly be well advised to advance their plans to take advantage of the present extremely low material prices," the executive stated. "If a building shortage becomes apparent during the next eighteen months or two years, it will logically follow that the construction industry will again become more than normally active, with a corresponding increase in basic material costs."

Comparative figures for contracts awarded during the two half-yearly periods of 1929 and 1930, as shown by an analysis of national statistics compiled by the F. W. Dodge Corporation, were quoted by Twaits as follows: 1930, nonresidential building, $1,126,000,000, as against $1,246,000,000 last year; public works and public utilities, this year, $894,000,000 against $572,000,000 in 1929; and residential construction, $554,000,000 during the current year against $1,045,000,000 last year. Total building contracts for the nation of all classes of construction to June 20 of 1930 were $2,375,000,000, compared with $2,864,000,000 for the corresponding period of 1929.

BAY FRONT PURCHASES ANNOUNCED

Three Beach Homes to Be Erected Around Private Yacht Harbor

NEWPORT BEACH, July 19. (Exclusive)—Sale of bay-front property valued at nearly $167,000 to three purchasers, Fred E. Lewis, owner of the Diamond Bar ranch at Spadra; Charles M. Cotton, Long Beach oil man, and Victor Fleming, Hollywood motion-picture director, who will construct three Spanish-type beach homes about a small private yacht harbor, was reported this week by Louis W. Briggs, realty broker, who handled the transaction.

The property is a part of the Robert M. Frick tract, located near M street. The improvements contemplated will cost more than another $100,000. Work will start soon on the Lewis home, plans for which are being drawn by Walter R. Hagedohm.

Eugene Elliott of the Harbor Orange County Realty Company has sold the Vern Speicht home on Balboa Island for $30,000 to Frank W. Ford, Pomona citrus grower, and sold the East Surf avenue home of M. J. Brenna, western representative of the Marshall Field Company of Chicago, to E. J. Jochimsen, manager of the La Verne Orange Growers' Association. The reported price was $7000.

M. Hartman Fullerton, furniture man, and associates, purchased through Elliott the P. W. Harding estate consisting of four lots and twelve houses for approximately $15,000. Industrial Properties, Inc., of Los Angeles, paid a similar sum for the A. K. Plummer property consisting of two houses and five lots at Bay View and Bay avenues. The same concern recently purchased seventy-five lots in the Seville tract on Balboa peninsula and seven lots on the ocean front, through W. L. Jordan.

CITY-WIDE GAINS RECORDED

Ten of Fifteen Districts Increase Realty Activity, Seven Gain in Financing Operations

With 1018 transfers of property in Los Angeles last week as indicated by the number of deeds filed, and 848 trust deeds and mortgages, substantial city-wide increases were recorded in volume of realty activity and in the number of financing instruments filed, according to the regular weekly survey compiled by the Fidelity Savings and Loan Association.

Ten of the fifteen districts into which the city as a whole is divided increased realty activity last week, and seven districts made substantial gains in real estate financing operations.

As compared with the preceding week, the 1018 deeds of last week showed an increase of 124, and 151 more trust deeds and mortgages were filed during the last week than were recorded during the period of the preceding survey. Real estate financing for the seven-day period involved the sum of $3,484,308.

GREATER INCREASES

The Hollywood, the West Los Angeles, and the West Washington districts made the greatest increases in activity, and the largest financing gains were shown in the Elysian Park, Eagle Rock and Westlake Park districts.

In the Southwest district, which was the center of real estate activity, 162 deeds were filed, an increase of eighteen compared to the preceding week, and the 168 trust deeds and mortgages were valued at $386,562. The Wilshire district held second place in the survey with 138 deeds, a gain of four, and the 121 financing instruments involved a total of $645,431.

OTHER DISTRICTS

The West Los Angeles district, in third place, with 136 transfers of property, was first in point of increase over the last survey. In that section, there was a gain of fifty-seven deeds during the week. The thirty-six financing instruments were valued at $139,305, a gain of $40,350.

There were 117 deeds filed in the Hollywood district, an increase of forty-seven, and the $788,572 involved in financing placed the Hollywood district in first place for such operations last week. In the San Fernando Valley district 106 deeds were filed, a gain of eight, and with seventy-four transfers, the West Washington district registered a gain of twenty-one. The Elysian Park district increased last week's total by fourteen deeds.

With the exception of the Highland Park district where there was a loss of a single trust deed and the Hollenbeck Heights and Central Business districts, every section of the city showed increases in trust deeds and mortgages filed last week. The greatest gains were made in the Wilshire, Hollywood, Southwest, and Elysian Park districts.

Filings for last week registered an increase of 1379 instruments over the preceding period, indicating the consistent advance of the real estate market toward normalcy, according to the regular weekly survey of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company.

SUBURBAN LEASE RECORDED

Increased Value of Alhambra Property Cited in Negotiations for Business Corner

SAN GABRIEL, July 19. (Exclusive)—Purchased in 1921 at a cost of $653.60, the northwest corner of Las Tunas Drive and Mission Drive, with a frontage of 100 feet on Las Tunas and a depth of 190 feet on Mission, has been leased for ninety-nine years at an average monthly rental of $210.

This monthly rental amount will be almost half of the original purchase price of the property, indicative of the advance in realty values in this section.

The transaction, just closed, was negotiated between Howard P. Buttress, the owner, and Jimmy Addington and Phil Hickey, proprietors of the Mission Motor Service which now occupies the corner. The nine-ninety-year lease involves a total amount of $369,090.

On November 17, 1921, Buttress bought ten acres between the Alhambra city line and Mission Drive, fronting on Las Tunas, from Walter J. Wallace for $15,000. In less than nine years the property has been developed into a business center.

The Mission Motor Service was the first business to occupy the Mission and Las Tunas corner and the lessees plan to erect a $20,000 superservice plant, work to be started within sixty days. The lease was handled by the real estate firm of Buck and Hughes of this city.

Real Estate Primer

(Copyright, 1930, by I. A. Thorson)

The growth of cities depends on the development of agriculture, manufacture and trade. In their wake, and as necessary adjuncts, come financial organizations, transportation, and highly developed means of communication.

As already stated, only as there are surplus food products from agricultural districts can manufacture and commerce and, consequently, a city develop. Surplus foodstuffs from the farms are traded for other food stuffs and for manufactured articles. As greater efficiency is developed by agriculture through the introduction of farm machinery, surplus food and labor are released from the farms. If the agricultural methods of 1850 were still in vogue, 40,000,000 farm workers would be necessary today, while as a fact, only half of this number is needed because of the introduction of power and machinery on the farm. Furthermore, it is estimated that 30,000,000 acres of crop lands have been released for the production of human foodstuffs and fibers by the decrease in the number of animals needed because of the substitution of machinery for animal power.

DIVISION OF LABOR

When division of labor begins to take place urban development becomes increasingly rapid up to a certain point. Surplus food is supplied in increasing quantities to feed the urban population and to be used in exchange for the manufactured products of the city. The labor which formerly worked on the farm is transferred to the factory in or near the city.

The Indian, before the advent of the white man, killed game and gathered wild rice and herbs for his food. From the skins he made his tents, moccasins and clothing. The Indian family was self-sufficient, but as a rule, produced no more food than was necessary to supply its own needs.

EARLY PIONEERS

Some of the early American pioneers were to a large extent forced to produce their necessary requirements for food and clothing. However, the early settlers of the Middle and Far West soon began to produce foodstuffs in excess of their own requirements, hauling such surplus to more or less distant trading posts or towns in oxcarts or in horse-drawn wagons. They exchanged the wheat and other farm products for coffee, tea, spices and other groceries not produced by their farms—foodstuffs raised in other parts of the country or imported from foreign lands by boat and stage, and later by steamships and steam railroads. Clothing was still generally made at home; the women carded, spun and weaved the wool from the sheep. Shoes, especially work shoes, were made from the hides of domestic animals. A blacksmith shop was one of the necessary adjuncts to a well-regulated farm. Oftentimes, however, a blacksmith, a cobbler, a tailor and other craftsmen were shared by a community, the smithy occupying a central location in a group of farms, while the cobbler, tailor, tinsmith, etc., were itinerant, that is, going from house to house.

Here we see the beginning of the division of labor which was to play such a tremendous part in the growth of the city, and which culminated in the "industrial revolution" which marked the transition of manufacture from the domestic stage to the factory stage, and resulted in the rapid development of the modern city.

Division of labor is simply cooperation. You make for me what you can do better than I can, and vice versa. Thus the tailor will make the clothes for the shoemaker and the shoemaker will make the shoes for the tailor, etc., etc.

The far-reaching effects of this division of labor on the growth of cities will be discussed in a succeeding chapter.

"Two very graphic descriptions of pioneer life in the Middle West are contained in the books of Rolvaag, "Giants in the Earth," and Johan Bojer, "The Emigrants."

DISTRICTS LED BY HOLLYWOOD

Area's June Construction Totals $1,022,200

Southwest First in City in Home Erection

Same Section Also Leads in Apartment Work

Hollywood led all other districts of the city in highest valuation for new construction in June with $1,022,200, according to the California Title Insurance Company. Second place was taken by the Southwest with a total of $763,420 in June building permits.

Of the 332 permits issued during June for new residences, the Southwest took first place over the rest of the city with seventy-six one-family dwellings taking tangible shape last month. Fifty-five of this type of housing were erected in the Del Rey area, giving that district second place.

The new residences constructed last month in the West Los Angeles area reached a higher total valuation than any other district of the city could boast of. The forty-one new homes for which permits were issued during June in this district cost an aggregate of $309,500. The Del Rey section was second in this respect with $93,700.

The Del Rey district took the leadership in new duplex construction both in point of greatest number of new two-family dwellings, with a total of nineteen, and also with respect to highest valuation of these new structures, which reached a total of $117,300. The Southwest was second in point of highest number of new two-family dwellings with a total of eighteen, while the Wilshire district was second with respect to greatest valuation with $93,700.

More new apartment-house buildings took concrete form last month in the Southwest than in any other part of the city. Permits for nine of this type of housing were issued in this district alone and it is estimated that they will cost approximately $165,370 before they are completed. The Wilshire district and Hollywood tied for second-place honors with eight new apartment-houses each, while Hollywood led all other districts of the city in highest valuation for its new buildings of this type with a total of $352,000.

Of the thirty-seven new store buildings for which permits were issued last month, Hollywood and the Eagle Rock-Highland Park areas claimed seven each, while the Southwest and the Wilshire districts witnessed the erection of six in their respective areas. Wilshire's six new store buildings are scheduled to cost $87,500 before ready for occupancy.

BUILDING AT ONCE URGED BY OFFICIAL

Immediate Population Gain, Higher Material Prices Predicted

Los Angeles and vicinity should take advantage of present building costs to erect homes, apartments for the increase in population which is sure to occur in the next few months. This is the conclusion of Percy W. Baird, vice-president of the Santa Monica Land and Water Company, one of developers of Huntington Palisades. Rairden has just returned from a six-week business trip through eastern cities, Canada and the Northwest.

"I found everywhere on my trip that people were amazed at the growth of Southern California as shown in the recent census, and many persons said that they were making their plans to come to Southern California to live in the near future.

"In Toronto and Seattle particularly I found that the people appreciate that this is a very advantageous time to build because materials are cheaper than in many years.

"Everyone in Los Angeles who contemplates building should get started as soon as possible before materials advance in price, which they are sure to do before the year is over."

Third Corner Lot Acquired By Capitalist

George H. Mayr, Chicago and Beverly Hills capitalist, has purchased through the Uncle Sam Realty Company, Hollywood brokers, the southwest corner of Vine and Selma for $160,000 cash, Leonard B. Culver, president of the company, announced yesterday. This is the third corner acquired by Mayr on Vine street.

The Uncle Sam Realty Company, which also reports the sale of the improved business corner in Chicago, has moved its offices to the Selma and Vine corner, Culver states.

ENGINEERS STILL WORKING ON DIESEL FOR AUTOS

Flexibility in Traffic Stumbling Block to Use of Cheaply Operated Oil-Burning Motor Car Engine

BY E. Y. WATSON

DETROIT, July 19.—Despite obstacles yet to be overcome, engineers are still laboring to adapt the Diesel-type engine for use in automobiles. The chief problem to be solved is to produce a fuel or oil-burning power plant that can equal or better the acceleration of the gasoline types.

How much an engine can be speeded up, the possibility of the oil-burners challenging gasoline as fuel for passenger automobiles may be found results. An opinion of this kind was expressed by the late Andrew Lawrence Riker, a pioneer motor builder, before the Society of Automotive Engineers at a recent meeting.

He confirmed a view voiced by Dr. J. G. Vincent, vice-president of the Packard Motor Car Co., a year ago discussing the relative usefulness of the Diesel for airplane and automobile use. He pointed out that the Diesel engine is a high-compression engine in which the pressure is increased to something like 500 pounds to the square inch and that one of the stumbling blocks in its use for motor cars would be the ability of making this compression smooth. It would have to be flexible enough to allow for fast acceleration and smoothness through an entire speed range and to allow for frequent changes demanded by modern traffic, the average engine operating at high speeds only requires thirty or forty pounds to the square inch compression and runs up as much as a thirty of full speed.

"Flexibility," he added, "is of no great moment in the power boat or airplane, but it is vital to the car. The other side of the question has been taken up by C. L. Cummins, an engineer of Columbus, Ind. Following experiments and trial runs of two Diesel-powered cars that he built, Mr. Cummins told the engineers about them when they met at French Lick, Ind., in May.

The first car made a trip from Indianapolis to New York in January, last. It showed fuel consumption of between twenty-five to thirty-five miles per gallon of fuel oil at negligible cost. The engine had four cylinders and top speed of fifty-five miles an hour, being mounted in a sedan limousine chassis of standard type. The entire car weighed 6000 pounds.

Having learned something from this performance, he installed the same engine in a roadster chassis that brought the weight down to 4500 pounds. This car he drove from his home in Indiana to Daytona Beach Fla., at the time that Kaye Don was making his unsuccessful tries to beat the Segrave record.

En route at Chattanooga, Tenn., Cummins subjected the car to a climb up Lookout Mountain. He made it in high gear with the exception of two rough spots where second gear was forced.

At Daytona, a two-to-one gear ratio was put into the axle and, under official timing, the car was able

CONTEST WINNER NAMED

Third Weekly First Prize Won by G. C. Egan; Seven More Competitions in Ten-Week Event

Entries in The Times photographic motor-log contest for the third week in the ten-week series being conducted for $500 in prizes gave the judges a decidedly busy time with the total number increased.

Those gaining the three cash prizes for the third contest which closed last Monday at midnight are:

E. C. Hunt, 2220 South Orange Grove, first prize of $20.

A. L. Chinn, 123 West Fiftieth street, second prize of $10.

A. E. Thompson, 1238 West Seventh street, third prize of $5.

Honorable mention has been accorded by the judges to those photographs entered by R. Mitchell, 1 Grand; C. W. Arnold, 5717 Country; Lester A. Wirth, Elwood, Indiana (living in Long Beach,) and Mrs. Lillian Doran, 208 South Electric, Alhambra.

There will be seven additional contests run off to be awarded before the grand sweepstakes prizes of $50 and $25 will be awarded for first and second best of all entries during the ten weeks, but the contest will only runs until tomorrow night, when there will be no more entering.

Each week's first-prize picture, as reproduced on this page, is a scene in the High Sierra country and is accompanied by the caption beneath it.

Of Chinn's prize-winning photograph he says, in his words, "Yosemite Falls, the most gorgeous of them all, water plunging 2600 feet, looking out on majestic domes, meadow-like valleys and earth's oldest trees. Beautiful during the month of May and June. Abundance of water is falling, foliage is full and green."

Neither his picture nor that winning third prize is reproduced this week for lack of space.

Mrs. Doran's picture is also a Yosemite picture, Bridal Veil Falls.

Yosemite was an often recurring photograph in the entries this week, supplanting in majority of all entries the favor shown in the two previous weeks for the Bishop country.

The rules governing this contest, which are simple and easily complied with, are to be found on the next page. Read them and submit some picture you have taken on a motor trip this year or make a trip and carefully choose a spot to photograph and go after one of the weekly prizes and one of the sweepstakes prizes. Remember, each weekly contest closes at midnight every Monday night until the contest closes.

SUMMER ACTIVITIES AT THE SHORE NEAR THE VILLAGE

BEAUTIFUL LAKE ARROWHEAD...

LAKE ARROWHEAD OFFERS COOL WEEK-END TRIP

New High-Gear Road Into Region Brings Resort Within Few Hours' Drive of Los Angeles Area

Hot weather relief is best offered by a motoring trip.

The beach is the most frequent choice at this season but for those who would like some variation of this program it is suggested that the higher altitudes of the Southern California mountains be sought for a cool week-end.

Snuggling in the San Bernardino Mountains Lake Arrowhead is one of the most attractive sites for a short week-end trip that is available.

And to make it easier and more quickly reached by the Southern California motorist a new highway is being developed through the mountains to this resort spot.

It is a new million-dollar high-gear road from San Bernardino to Lake Arrowhead and will be completed within the next thirty days, State Highway Commission officials announced last week.

Seven miles of the new highway beginning at Camp Waterman in Waterman Canyon, and this stretch of new highway alone eliminates practically all the switchbacks of the old road, already have been completed and are in use. Work

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS PAINTS "Cover the Earth"

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS paints are used to make this world in which we live brighter and fresher . . . to actually "cover the earth" with color. For years they have done their job well. For that reason many experienced painters prefer the paint carrying the Sherwin-Williams trade-mark—a white with red globe covered paint.

IN REO SPEED WAGONS

Reo Speed Wagons "cover the earth" carrying Sherwin-Williams paints to painters for the same reason—for many years they have done their job well.

To do a job well for Sherwin-Williams, a truck is required to perform above the average. It must be dependable. It must be fast. It must be economical. It must endure. It must be powerful.

Reo Speed Wagons possess these requirements. . . . They do every job better, cheaper, faster. And what they do for Sherwin-Williams they can do for you. For convincing proof call a Reo salesman.

AUTO DRIVING LESSONS GIVEN

Gratifyingly Large Groups Appear at Classes

"Suppose you change your mind after you give a signal to turn, what do you do?" "When someone pushes your car in front of a fire plug and you get a tag for it, who is guilty?" "What's a transmission? What's a differential?"

These are some of the questions that nine men tried to answer at the May Company auditorium Wednesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons, when capacity houses of motorists were there to improve their driving and get "safety first" in a practical way.

Gerry Fitzgerald of the May Company, sponsors of the move, acted chairman of the meetings, and Deputy Chief James E. Davis, head of the Los Angeles traffic division, gave the opening speech Wednesday. He urged a courteous attitude and the use of common sense in the driving of a car. He said that the application of the Golden Rule would eliminate 95 per cent of the traffic accidents of the city.

"A limit of thirty miles per hour in the thickly settled portions of Los Angeles, or an average speed of twenty-two and a half miles, is the present objective that we have set for the department, for we consider that forty miles is too fast on narrow streets or at obstructed intersections," said the traffic chief, "and

At 10,000 Foot Altitude in High Sierras

Following is description supplied by G. C. Egan in submitting this picture in Times Motor-log Contest: "The Rock Creek basin or canyon has a string of eight lakes at altitudes around 10,000 feet. A stream several miles long affords excellent trout fishing and beautiful camp sites. The upper end of the canyon is walled in by jagged peaks of the summit of the high Sierras. To reach: Take San Fernando Road to Saugus, keep right through Mint Canyon to Mojave, Little Lake and Bishop to Tom's place, twenty-six miles north of Bishop. Turn left into canyon and follow creek eleven and one-half miles to store and lodge, 326 miles from Los Angeles. Highway good, canyon trail fair."

Influx of Tourists to California Encourages with Large Increase Being Revealed

FIGURES GIVEN FOR FIRST HALF

Count Made of Newcomers at Border Stations

Eleven Per Cent Gain Over Same Period in 1929

Population Increase Partly Due to Tourists

Whatever opinions may be held regarding general business conditions in Southern California there is no encouragement for pessimists in the incoming motor tourist figures just compiled by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California for the first six months of the year. Compared with the similar period in 1929, the tourist arrivals show a healthy increase in number with indications that this will be maintained throughout the year.

The figures quoted are for the four quarantine checking stations on the Southern California border maintained by the State Department of Agriculture. These show that the so-called "foreign cars" or cars bearing out-of-State licenses coming into the State, the first six months of this year totaled 83,719, a gain of 5013, over the first half of last year, which is slightly more than 11 per cent. An average of three passengers was carried by each car, which means that more than 160,000 visitors arrived in Southern California over the eastern route during the first six months of this year.

FEWER PER CAR

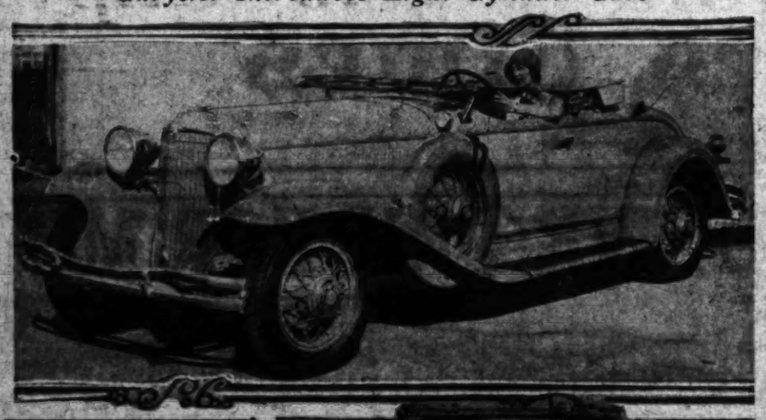
The check also indicates that this is a gradual decline in the average number of passengers counted in each car. In 1928 the check per car was 3.096 and in 1930 it showed 3.048.

This check, however, does not represent the total of motor tourists coming into Southern California in the period named, as there is no way of counting the tens of thousands of motor cars which come in at the northern border and across the Oregon State line from the northern States and Canada. Visitors from the neighboring country to the north are fond of coming to Southern California for winter vacation and many of them remain for months.

INCREASES CENSUS

This heavy trek of automobile parties coming into the State in a steady stream the year 'round is one of the reasons for California leading all States in the Union in percentage of increase during the past ten years, it is pointed out by the Automobile Club of Southern California. It is fairly well established by check during past years that one out of ten of the motor visitors settles in the State for permanent residence. Usually the motor tourist visits every part of Southern California before returning home or making a decision to remain here permanently.

Chrysler Introduces Eight-Cylinder Cars



Low Appearance Noted in New Cars

The roadster in the new Chrysler eight line is seen above while below is a straight front view of the new cars. Lower lines accomplished with unit construction of body and frame are an outstanding feature.

Buick Straight Eight Soon on Local Display

All of the Buick dealers of Southern California will gather in Los Angeles next Wednesday for the most interesting two-day session ever conducted by the Howard Automobile Company of Los Angeles, Buick distributor. The big feature will be the preview of the new Buick eight which will be introduced to the public throughout the United States next Saturday.

This follows confirmation of reports last week that Buick would introduce a new eight for 1931 and that the engine would be of the valve-in-head type. In addition to viewing the new models, the dealers will drive the new cars for performance, which, it is stressed, will be the outstanding feature of the new models.

Always at this time of year when the introduction of new Buick models approaches, there are endless reports of what the latest cars will be. For months there has been an increase in the reports that Buick had an eight ready. However, the rumors were uncertain as to the type it would be. Now it is known that the cylinders will be in a line.

"We are particularly happy over the forthcoming presentation of the 1931 Buick," said Harold W. Tuttle, general manager of the Howard Automobile Company of Los Angeles. "While at the Buick factory recently and at the General Motors proving grounds I drove these new cars."

The day of presentation, Saturday, will be of still further importance to the Howard organization here, for then the new building at Western avenue and Fourth street will be opened with a complete display of the new cars. Following months of construction, this building, which also incorporates a large service department, is to be ready for the public then. Thursday there will be a special luncheon at the building at which prominent officials and representatives of the business interests of that section will be present.

NEWHALL BY-PASS CLOSED

The new road that skirts the Newhall tunnel is not completed yet, but it is expected to permanently open soon.

COAST ROAD BEING WIDENED AT GARDIFF

The Coast Route to San Diego (U.S. 101) is being widened for one mile just south of the San Diego county line between Cardiff and Solano Beach, reports the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

CRATER LAKE GAINS

Crater Lake National Park reports a large gain in preseason travel. During the month of May 6470 visitors entered the park, which was fifty-two more persons than came in during the entire period from October 1 to May 30, 1929.

CHRYSLER EIGHT HERE

In-Line Motors With Changed Body Lines Lend New Characteristics to Cars

"Walter P. Chrysler today announces a new straight eight-cylinder motor car, the first eight-cylinder car ever to bear the Chrysler name, and the proved product of months of engineering development," according to the Greer-Robbins Company, at whose showrooms the new car is on display. The showing of the new car will be at the Greer-Robbins Company tomorrow evening and the following evening, the 21st and 22nd inst.

Outstanding mechanical features of the line include the L-head type of straight-eight engine, with the Chrysler silver dome cylinder head, the four-speed transmission and gear shift; downdraft carburetion; automatically controlled radiator shutters; two-way hydraulic shock absorbers, four-wheel internal-expanding hydraulic brakes, completely inclosed; fuel pumps, four-point rubber engine mountings, impulse neutralizers, the bonderite rust-proofing process on all enameled parts, and scores of other refinements.

One engineering accomplishment has been the development of the chassis and body design as a unit, employing a new type of reinforced double-drop chassis frame and a welded all-steel body. This produces extreme lowness and increased head room with no sacrifice of road clearance.

TIE ROD HIDDEN

Long, graceful hoods, covering the engine compartment narrow at the front and come to a point in a single vertical chromium bar at the center, creating an atmosphere of speed, power and grace. Bullet-shaped chromium head lamps and sweeping air-wing fenders add to the fleet lines of the low frontal area. The lamp tie rod is concealed behind the radiator shutters, adding to the clean-cut front appearance.

Chromium beading tapers from the radiator cap around the front of the car, in beautiful contrast to the enameled surface of the radiator shell. Mounted on the radiator cap are the silver wings of Chrysler, drawn nearly straight back to denote speed and grace. Head lamps, cowl bars, bumpers, door handles and all exterior hardware are chromium plated. Chromium plating is also used on the rims of the wire wheels and along the edge of the running-boards.

ALL-STEEL BODY

All-steel bodies are introduced on every model. The front end, cowl, sides and rear compartment are one-piece stampings, flash welded and fused together in a single body unit. Annoying squeaks and rattles are eliminated by perfectly fitting doors and windows. Doors are single steel stampings welded together with bridge-type of construction. Depressions and ribs stamped in the metal prevent rumbling and drumming.

In the driver's compartment seats are adjustable for leg room. The steering column is also adjustable for three driving positions. On the instrument panel are speedometer, electric fuel gauge, ammeter, oil-pressure gauge and engine temperature indicator. Below these separate gauges are carburetor choke and manifold heat control buttons.

MOTOR SPECIFICATIONS

The engine of the Chrysler eight develops 80 horsepower at 3400 r.p.m. It has a bore of 3 inches, a stroke of 4 1-4 inches, and a displacement of 240.33 cubic inches. S.A.E. horsepower rating is 28.80. The compression ratio of 5.2 to 1 is standard, but optional compression ratio of 6.2 to 1 is available. The engine is mounted in rubber and completely insulated from the frame.

A fuel pump supplies the gasoline to the carburetor. The carburetor is equipped with an acceleration pump to furnish fuel instantly under sudden acceleration.

Engine lubrication is by full force feed to all main, connecting-rod and camshaft bearings. The oil pump is the gear type. Engine accessories include oil filter, air cleaner, fuel strainer and crankcase ventilator. The V-type fan belt also drives the generator at the left side of the engine.

The four-speed transmission with multirange gear shift has one reverse and four forward speed ranges—heavy duty, starting, acceleration and driving.

WORK IN LATIGO CANYON

Construction is in progress on the Latigo Canyon road which runs between the Roosevelt Highway and Ventura Boulevard, according to information received by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

AUTOS MAY GET DIESEL MOTORS

to average a fraction better than eighty miles an hour. This speed was certified by the contest board of the American Automobile Association, the average covering five miles in both directions with and against the wind on the level stretch of sand.

From this experience, Cummins believes the Diesel principle with further research and trials can be used in the automotive field. He is now said to be designing a new Diesel comparable in dimensions to present standard gasoline power plants in truck and bus use. He believes that it can be made to serve its purpose and give large fuel economy over present types, together with high torque or acceleration characteristics that will make it easy to handle in traffic.

That the engineering fraternity is alive to future Diesel possibilities is indicated in a recent action of the S.A.E. in forming a committee on such engines. It is the hope of the group of engineers who have this matter in hand that eventually Diesels may eventually replace the large industrial and truck types. Therefore, they hold that standards should be set up to keep the oil burners are made to use quantities. They are pressing with the work.

Ford Invades Italian Fiel

The Ford Motor Company has purchased the Isotta-Fraschini automobile plant of Milan, Italy, and will manufacture a new six-cylinder car to be known as the Ford-Isotta-Fraschini. It is rumored that the General Motors Corporation plans a similar evasion of the Italian tariff against importation of American automobiles.

The bantam Austin offers a new idea about going places!

CONSIDER this new idea of transportation without tonnage, beauty without bulk, mileage with minimum expense... see what it offers you.

First of all . . . economy. Here is the bantam Austin waiting to take you wherever you wish for a mere ¼ of a cent a mile for gas, oil and tires. It's a car that does fifty miles an hour on the straightaway yet which stretches a gallon of gasoline over forty miles of road as well.

It is one member of the family that seldom needs new shoes. Twenty to forty thousand miles on a set of tires is its usual performance.

Yet the bantam Austin vies in smartness with cars of far more impressive list prices, offers as much of a thrill in its way as the high powered giants, and gives you a sense of perfect control and easy handling that only another Austin can match. Yet it lists for but $445 f.o.b. factory.

As the garage-mate of your larger car, the Austin will pay for itself by sparing the big car the many one and two passenger trips that are so costly in fuel and depreciation.

Certainly it's a car worth seeing. You'll find it waiting for you at the address below.

Come see it!
It will surprise and please you!

A GREAT CAR ON THE ROAD

Vacation time . . . the call of the open road . . . emphasize more forcefully than ever that Oldsmobile is a great car on the road.

It has speed that makes miles a matter of minutes. It has pick-up to flash past slower-moving cars. It has a tremendous power reserve for hills and hard pulling.

Such alert all-round performance in itself makes Oldsmobile a brilliant car to drive. But this fine car of low price offers infinitely more.

Its big, powerful engine is so smooth that there is no noticeable vibration, even at high speeds. Its performance is so flexible that it responds instantly to every call you make upon it. Its low center of gravity and balanced weight give it roadability that seems almost uncanny. It is so easy to handle—in steering, in gear-shifting, in braking—that you can drive all day long without fatigue. And it is so comfortable, with its wide, deep-cushioned seats and four hydraulic shock absorbers, that riding is always restful, no matter where you drive.

We feel certain Oldsmobile performance will appeal to you. Come in and let us show you, by actual tests, what a splendid car it is to drive, in traffic or on the road.

is indicated in a recent decision of the S.A.E. to formulate standards on such engines. It is the belief of the group of engineers who have this matter in hand that automotive Diesels may eventually outnumber the larger industrial and marine types. Therefore, they hold that the standards should be set up before the oil burners are made in large quantities. They are proceeding with the work.

Ford Invades Italian Field

The Ford Motor Company has purchased the Isotta-Fraschini automobile plant of Milan, Italy, and will manufacture a new low-priced car to be known as the Ford-Isotta-Fraschini. It is rumored that General Motors Corporation plans a similar evasion of the Italian tariff against importation of American automobiles.

ANTIBES, (France) July 19. (AP)—France overcame a fighting Italian tennis team today to enter the challenge round for the Davis Cup.

JOHN VAN RYN.

Adding two more victories to the one achieved yesterday in the opening match of the interzone final, the United States forges chalked up the three victories necessary to clinch the series. Tomorrow's two singles cannot affect the outcome and the Americans will clash with the French for the trophy here on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. As usual, however, the South Americans upset all the locker-room dope.

LOTT VICTORIOUS

Gallant Lott, Humbert De Morpurgo, Italian many hereabouts had believed would win from George Lott of Chicago, was beaten by scores of 6-3, 10-8, 6-3, in a match which was interrupted by darkness yesterday with the American leading at the end of sets to one.

The Italian nobleman then paired with Placido Gaslini in a last-minute shift of the doubles line-up and won the crack American combination of John Van Ryn, East Orange, N. J., and Wilmer Allison, Austin, Tex., in one of the hardest tussles they have had in many a day. The match went to five sets, provided some brilliant sporting tennis and ended with the Americans on top by scores of 4-6, 6-3, 6-4, 1-6, 6-3.

Tomorrow, in the anticlimax, John Doeg of Santa Monica, Cal., will be substituted for Allison against De Morpurgo and Lott will face Georgio De Stefani, who forced Allison to five hard sets yesterday.

It may be that De Morpurgo suddenly changed his tactics overnight and resorted, on a desperate effort to win the doubles rather than trust to the chance of a singles win over Lott. At any rate, for his one set victory the Chicagoan, he stuck to

Fothergill to Join Chisox

DETROIT, July 19. (AP)—Robert Roy Fothergill, outfielder and of late pinch batter for the Tigers, went to the Chicago White Sox today by the waiver route. Since 1921 Fothergill has been on the Tiger roster except for a period of seasoning with the Rochester club of the International League. He has an all-time major league batting average above the .300 mark and last year was the most consistent pinch hitter in either league.

CUBS TAKE LAST TILT FROM FOES

Bruins Near League Lead With 5-to-4 Victory Over Brooklyn Squad

BROOKLYN (N. Y.) July 19. (AP) The Chicago Cubs climbed into a virtual tie with Brooklyn's Robins for the National League lead today, trailing by only a few points after winning the final game of the series, 5 to 4. Chicago won four games of the five.

Charley Root

Dazzy Vance, pitching with only a day's rest, pitched well for five innings with an early lead given him by Babe Herman's home run in the first. The Dazzler lost command in the sixth when English's triple and Hack Wilson's twenty-sixth home run of the year put the Cubs ahead and a single by Stephenson and a double by Hartnett netted another run.

The essential tallies, however, came in the eighth as the result of a wild throw by Catcher Hank Deberry. Vance started the inning badly and was relieved by Phelps, who walked Wilson to fill the bases. Two runners were forced at the plate and as Deberry was trying to make a double play at first he heaved the ball far into right field and two runs scored.

Brooklyn rallied and knocked Bob

TILDEN LAUDS AMERICANS

Praises Young Davis Cup Team for Great Showing in Conquering Italian Players

BY WILLIAM T. TILDEN II

[Copyright, 1930, by the North American Newspaper Alliance]

PARIS, July 19. (Exclusive)—The United States entered the Davis Cup challenge round by eliminating Italy when George Lott took the fourth set of his uncompleted match against Baron De Morpurgo. The scores were 2-6, 9-7, 10-8, 6-3.

Wilmer Allison and John Van Ryn performance by the Americans. The order of the service was Morpurgo and Allison, Gaslini and Van Ryn.

BILL TILDEN.

Morpurgo was the outstanding star of the match. The vital game came on Allison's service. The Americans arose to the occasion and crashed their way to victory, 6-3. No matter how badly they played, both Allison and Van Ryn, filled with the spirit of confidence born of certain success, were inspired with their superior ability and never saw anything but victory ahead and pressed toward it.

The Italian team was fighting desperately. Morpurgo particularly was taking tremendous chances, poaching all over Gaslini's court and getting away with it often, but the Italians were forced by a team that was too good in every department for them. Gaslini was outclassed by the other three men and failed to measure up to standard. The Americans centered the attack on him and he could not meet it.

DONA BERTHA II WINS RACE

Harry C. Fisher's Dona Bertha II was the winner of the second round of the Los Angeles star-boat fleet elimination series to decide representative in the international championships at Chesapeake Bay next September. Judge Rey B. Schauer's Hovie Star II, sailed by Elizabeth Deane, was second yesterday. The Main, sailed by Joe Allison, was third. Allid, with Arch Eckdale at the stick was fourth and the Morningstar, handled by Pat Patrice, was fifth. The stars will again tomorrow in the fourth round.

The fleet sailed over a ten-mile course yesterday off Long Beach from the Pine-avenue pier to the Long Beach buoy and back.

Thirty-six-Hole Test Faces Title Finalists

Fleming, Messenger Meet in First Flight Clash

BY EDWARD LAWRENCE

Harry B. Wesbrook of Annandale meets W. L. (Bill) Jelliffe of Girard in the thirty-six-hole finals of the 1930 Los Angeles city golf championship over the Wilson memorial course at Griffith Park today.

HARRY WESBROOK

Jelliffe, who reigns a slight favorite to win the championship and follow in the footsteps of Pay Coleman of California, gained the finals by defeating A. W. (Laddie) Biggs, a fellow-club member, 2 and 1, in the eighteen-hole semifinals played yesterday.

Wesbrook, a decided dark horse throughout the tournament, swept into the finals with a 4 and 3 victory over Web Hanson, youthful Wilshire golfer.

While Jelliffe is the favorite, Wesbrook has been playing golf of championship caliber and there is a decided possibility of an upset. Jelliffe, however, has the wider experience and the stamina, which

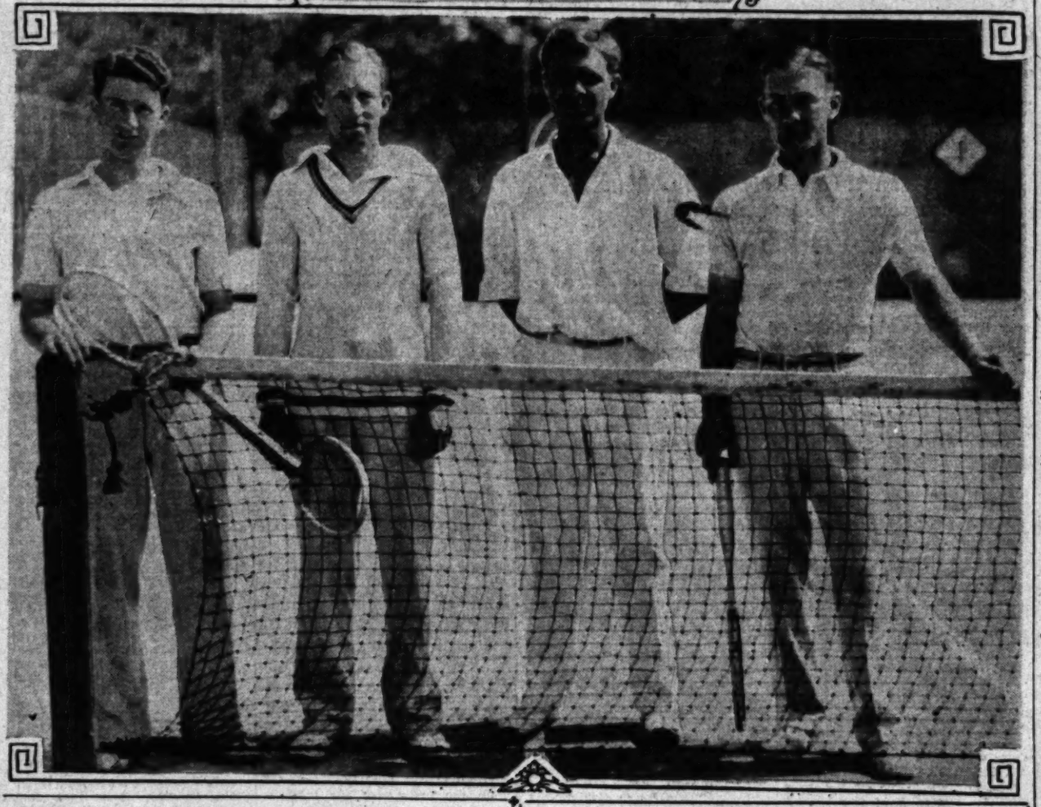
THEY SPANKED ITALY

Here's the American Davis Cup team which yesterday cinched the right to challenge France for the Davis Cup by beating the Italian team in the finals of the interzone competition. Our boys won the first three matches and today's singles have no bearing on the final outcome. The gentleman in action is Wilmer Allison, No. 1 singles man and partner of Johnny Van Ryan in the doubles. In the group photo, left to right, are John Van Ryan, Wilmer Allison, Johnny Doeg and George Lott, Jr. Doeg will take Allison's place in the singles today, Lott playing the other match.



WALSH TWIRLS ANGEL VICTORY

Augie Holds Oaks to Mere Six Hits and Wins

Lelivelt's Gang Pounds Out 6-to-3 Triumph

Sloppy Fielding by Acorns Helps Seraphs

OAKLAND, July 19. — The Oaks played ragged baseball behind McQuaid at Oakland this afternoon and the Angels scored an easy 6-to-3 victory. Augie Walsh held the Acorns to six hits. One of them was Ernie Lombardi's homer over the left-field fence after Johnny Verges doubled in the ninth inning.

AUGIE WALSH

The Angels collected fourteen hits and several of them were pop flies that fell between Oakland fielders. Los Angeles was given a run in the first inning when Dean booted the ball with Sigafoos on third base. The Angels scored another in the second when McQuaid allowed a single and issued three walks to force a runner over the plate.

The first score off Walsh came in the fourth when Uhalt tripled and Verges hoisted a sacrifice fly. Walsh blanked the Oaks until the ninth, when Lombardi homed.

Two runs in the fifth cinched the game for Los Angeles. Schulmerich singles and Jacobs sacrificed. Parker singled, scoring Schulmerich, and took second on the throw to the plate. Statz singled infield to De Viveiros and Parker scored and Statz took third when De Viveiros made a wild throw to the plate.

In the seventh Parker dropped a pop fly in back of third and turned it into a triple and he scored when De Viveiros threw wild to third. The Angels' last run came in

STARS GO ON RAMPAGE TO ANNEX LEAD IN SERIES

Vittmen Swat Out Twenty Hits Off Three Beaver Hurlers; Turner Turns in Sheik Victory

BY BOB RAY

In case Mr. Oscar Vitt's Hollywood Stars appear all fagged out at today's double-header you'll know it's because of yesterday's ball game. The Sheiks ran themselves ragged yesterday swamping the Portland Ducks under a 20-to-4 score so if they aren't tired today they never will be.

While Jim Turner was keeping the Beavers in check, the Sheiks were pounding a trio of Portland pitchers for twenty plain and fancy base knocks, which with the nine walks given them and the six errors made by the visitors turned what was supposed to be a ball game into a rout.

JIM TURNER

Every member of the Stars banged out two hits during the wild afternoon with the exception of Dave Barbee, who put himself out of the ball game by bouncing a foul off his hoof the first time he came to bat. Included among the Hollywood hits were three home runs, Turner, Otie Brannan and Mickey Heath connecting for four base blows. Turner's circuit clout was a fluke affair, the ball bouncing between the concrete base and the wire of the right-field screen.

Curtis Fullerton, a former Hollywood hurler, started pitching for the Ducks, but gave way after the fifth when the Stars took advantage of some loose twirling and some looser fielding to run across seven runs and take an 8-to-1 lead. McDonald, former Santa Monica High School husky, pitched the sixth and part of the seventh, during which time the Stars added eight more runs to their total. Joe Cascarella finished and wasn't any more of a puzzle than his predecessors to the Vittmen, who nicked his offerings for their final quartet of counters.

STARS LEAD SERIES

Yesterday's win gave the Stars a 3-to-2 lead in the series, Vitt has Emil Yde, Augie Johns and George Hollerson ready to fire at the Ducks today, while Skipper Woodall is expected to pick Wal-

BLUE LARKSPUR WINS

Bradley Colt Home in Front Easily in Chicago Racing Classic; Petee Wrack Second

BY CHARLES W. DUNKLEY
Associated Press Sports Writer

ARLINGTON PARK, CHICAGO, July 19. (AP)—Blue Larkspur, 1930 3-year-old champion of America, galloped to easy victory over a select field of five in the Arlington Cup, with $25,000 added, before 30,000 sweltering racing fans at Arlington Park today.

The brown 4-year-old son of Black Servant-Blossom Time captured the rich prize by three and one-half lengths, with Petee Wrack second and Toro third. Sun Beau was fourth and the frisky-acting Reveille Boy, surprise winner of the $50,000 American Derby, the only 3-year-old to accept the issue, finished fifth, trailing in last place.

Blue Larkspur ran the mile and a quarter in 2:03 4-5, a fifth of a second slower than the track record, but the same time in which Gallant Fox won the $70,000 Arlington classic a week ago.

As a result of his victory, Blue Larkspur moved into third place among the leading money winners of America for all time. He rewarded his owner, Edward R. Bradley of Lexington, Ky., with $25,200 for the mile and a quarter gallop, bringing his total earnings to $272,070, which ranks him next to Gallant Fox and America's leading money winner, Zev.

Although Gallant Fox and the western champion, Mission, were missing from the list of starters, the presence of Blue Larkspur was sufficient to scare out six others. Snowflake, Stars and Bars, Victorian, Maya, Gallahad and Paul Runyan were withdrawn after it became apparent to their owners the track would be fast and their entries had only a remote chance of winning.

Johnny Best, owner of Reveille Boy, however, thought his pride and joy, with the weight advantage of twelve pounds could conquer Blue Larkspur. Reveille Boy gave evidence he was ready for the race of his life when he bucked and reeled, twisted and turned and finally threw his jockey, Johnny Loyland, off his back twice, before he was led outside the starting gate.

There he was held by two assistant starters before the barrier could

FARRELL, MACFARLANE TIE

ELMSFORD (N. Y.) July 19. (AP)—Two former national open champions, Johnny Farrell and Willie Macfarlane, were deadlocked at 290 at the end of play in the 72-hole metropolitan open golf championship today. The tie will be played off tomorrow at the Fairview Country Club.

Farrell, starting the final day with a 36-hole total of 143, added a 70 on his third round and then topped off a steady performance with a brilliant 67 on the final 18. Macfarlane started the day a stroke back of Farrell, but scored 69 and 67 in the last two rounds to tie the Mamaroneck star. Farrell held the open title in 1928 and Macfarlane in 1925.

A stroke back of the leaders finished Horton Smith. Smith with 141 for his first 36 holes turned in a pair of 69's today. Gene Sarazen, finishing in a tie with Wiffy Cox for fourth place at 292, broke the competitive record for the short Fairview course with a 66 on his last round.

SUTTER, MRS. HARPER WIN LONGWOOD CROWNS

BROOKLINE (Mass.) July 19. (AP) Clifford Sutter of New Orleans, the intercollegiate tennis champion, today added the famous Longwood bowl to his string of titles by defeating Sidney B. Wood, young New Yorker, 5-7, 6-4, 6-3, 6-2, in a tame final.

Sutter played a defense game of pat ball. Wood's strokes were almost as soft and most of the time the ball came over the net as easily as a lazy butterfly.

Soft as Sutter's shots were, Wood returned forty-eight of them into the net and put fifty-six outside in the four sets. Sutter had thirty-one nets and forty-four outs. The victor, who made but six earned points in the first two sets, had a total of twenty-three for the match. Wood scored thirty-eight placements and service aces. Neither was able to hold his service for any great length at any stage.

After resting, Sutter and his victim joined their doubles partners and played five slow sets before Wood and Harold Blauer, also of New York, won by scores of 4-6, 6-2, 4-6, 6-3, 6-2.

Junior Olympic Champions Sail From New York En Route Through Canal to Home

New York Youngster Joins Returning Kings

FREEPORT (N. Y.) July 19. (Exclusive)—Amid scenes of tumultuous cheering and driving confetti blizzards which sometimes obscured the sun for hundreds of well wishers and sports enthusiasts from throughout the greater city, Southern California's champion Junior Olympic athletes today sailed on the homeward stretch for new adventures in the Spanish-Americas. The party returns to Los Angeles August 14.

JOHN E. NESS.

Aboard the Panama Mail liner Venezuela the group of young athletes who made victory a habit in the national competition in Atlantic City and accordingly annexed high honors for the "sunny sector," are en route for Los Angeles via the Panama Canal and intermediate Central American ports with memories of Fair Harbor scenes of enthusiasm still echoing out over Buttermilk Channel and the coastwise shipping lanes which lead to the Caribbean Sea.

The Eric Basin today responded to the farewell hosannahs of many friendly New Yorkers, the tenor shrillings of junior bay club members mingling with the hoarser edicts of older enthusiasts, policemen, stevedores and an imposing group of New York newspaper men and photographers.

The Venezuela will stop at Puerto Columbia, Canal Zone, Salvadore, Nicaragua, and the West Coast of Mexico on her homeward voyage. At all ports special receptions and exhibitions have been arranged for the youthful contingent of athletes, who will demonstrate their prowess for many of Spanish-America's official families. Almost as conspicuous as the champions was Vinnie Sullivan, New York newsboy, mascot king, Huckleberry Finn & Jr. modern, who sailed on the Venezuela.

His freckled countenance and missing front molars have helped to skyrocket him to a fame and popularity which may yet land him in the movies. Sullivan will teach the Southern and Central Americans how to knuckle down. Mr. and Mrs. John Ness, who have the Olympic boys in tow, welcomed Vinnie Sullivan to the group and the Hawaiian team also took him up.

HOW THEY LOOKED AT ATLANTIC CITY

Shamrock V on Way to Title Yacht Event

PORTSMOUTH (Eng.) July 19. (AP)—The Shamrock V, Sir Thomas Lipton's latest challenger for the America's Cup, started on her voyage across the Atlantic today to the accompaniment of cheers from a vast crowd and a serenade of ship's sirens, but was held up by stormy conditions.

SIR THOMAS LIPTON

The craft, on which Sir Thomas has pinned his hopes to achieve his ambition of capturing the famous cup, tonight was anchored in the Spithead Roadstead sheltered from a stiff blow and a turbulent sea. With her was Sir Thomas's steam yacht Erin, which will escort her across the ocean.

Late tonight the Shamrock V was taken in tow by the Erin and moved from Rhyde Roads up the Spithead roads toward Cowes, where the yachts races are annually held. The westerly wind was greatly abated and the water much calmer.

During the night the Shamrock will remain under the lee of the Isle of Wight, and in the morning, if weather reports are favorable, she will set sail again with the Erin.

Careful preparations have been made for the Shamrock to keep in touch with the Erin throughout the voyage to the United States. The Erin will keep Sir Thomas informed by wireless of the Shamrock's progress.

Capt. Heard of the Erin expected to reach the Azores in a week and to complete the long voyage within one month.

The Shamrock, when she started today, was not the trim racing craft she will be in the races at Newport beginning September 12. The top section of her towering mast has been removed and she has been yawl-rigged for the ocean crossing. This gives her a rather stumpy appearance, as compared with her racing rig.

WESTERN AMATEUR STARTS

Thirty-first Annual Golf Tourney to Get Under Way Tomorrow Over Chicago Course

BY PAUL MICKELSON
Associated Press Sports Writer

CHICAGO, July 19. (AP)—Two hundred and sixteen golfers, most of them comparative youngsters with rising hopes, unpack their war clubs today in a drive for the thirty-first western amateur championship over the Beverly Country Club course, where Chick Evans won the western open in 1910.

It will be one of the youngest fields in the championship's history. Even the defending champion, Donald K. Moe of Portland, Or., is barely out of his teens.

DON MOE.

But what the veterans lack in quantity there is more than made up in quality. Among them are such capable shot makers as Chick Evans, who has held virtually every title on this side of the Atlantic during his more than twenty years of golfing; Cyril Tolley and T. Phillip Perkins, formerly amateur champions of Great Britain; Bob McCreary of Des Moines, trans-Mississippi champion, and Rudy Knepper of Chicago.

Moe, apparently far off the great game he displayed in the Walker Cup matches and during the 1929 championship, ranks anything but a favorite to repeat in the long week's grind. The smart field of youngsters is led by Johnny Goodman of Omaha, the calm, sinewy muscled shot maker who toppled Bobby Jones in the national amateur at Pebble Beach last fall. Goodman finished high among the amateur winners in the national open at Interlachen this month despite one bad round and appears to be on top of his game as never before.

Other representatives of golf's younger generation who are regarded as certain contenders are Keefe Carter of Kansas City, 1925 champion and runner-up last year; Larry Moller of Quincy, Ill., runner-up in the national intercollegiate for Notre Dame at Oakmont; Gibson Dunlap of Los Angeles, who played spectacular golf along the Pacific Coast last spring; Fred Lyon of Chicago, former western junior champion; Johnny Lehman of Chicago, former Big Ten champion, and Jack Westland, Chicago district champion.

Sixteen States and England are represented in the field.

The western amateur is a championship exactly to the liking of the consistent shotmakers. Eighteen holes will be played Monday and Tuesday by the entire field for the thirty-six-hole qualifying round after which the low thirty-one and ties, who is spared the task of qualifying, will open match play. Two eighteen-hole matches will be played by the survivors Wednesday, after which each match will be at thirty-six holes until completion of the finals Saturday.

So large is the field that the first pair, Ray Sixty of Milwaukee and Art Sweet of Chicago, both golfing newspaper reporters, will tee off at 7:26 a.m. The largest gallery is expected to follow Goodman and Tolley who start at 1:20 p.m. for both days.

LAW WINS GO FROM JOHNSON ON FOUL

MANILA, July 19. (AP)—Eddie Law, Philadelphia featherweight, won on a foul from Kid Johnson of Cebu here tonight in the fourth round of a scheduled twelve-round bout.

Johnson, former feather champion, showed his old form in the first round, smashing Law to the ropes with a vicious right.

Law continued scoring jabs in the fourth when Johnson landed a right to his opponent's thigh. Law walked to his corner. The blow was obviously low but it was not believed incapacitating. The referee declared Law the winner. Law weighed 127 pounds and Johnson 127½.

Coen to Face Grant Today in Net Tilt

KANSAS CITY (Mo.) July 19. (AP) The three ranking tennis players of the Missouri Valley, two easterners and a player from the old South, will compete tomorrow for the singles and doubles championships of the twenty-first annual national clay-courts tennis tournament.

Championship pairings were finally determined today, when Wilbur F. (Junior) Coen, Kansas City, advanced to singles finals, with a straight set triumph over Herbert L. Bowman, New York City, and the defending doubles pair, Frederick Mercur and J. Gilbert Hall (Harrisburg, Pa., and Orange, N. J.) defeated Frank Shields and Emmett Pare (New York and Dayton.) Coen won 6-2, 6-3, 6-3, and Mercur and Hall remained in competition by winning, 6-3, 6-3, 3-6, 6-1.

Coen will play Bryan Grant, Jr., 19-year-old Atlanta Georgian, of a well-known tennis family, and Mercur and Hall will meet Wray Brown and Harris Coggeshall (St. Louis and Des Moines.) Grant went to the finals yesterday after a hard-fought five-set struggle with Bruce Barnes, Austin, Tex., and Brown and Coggeshall eliminated in straight sets of their semifinals Fred Royer and Louis Thalheimer, Chicago.

Coen and Bowman today played three sets of orthodox tennis, with no spectacular shots. The doubles were more entertaining, but both teams were erratic and the tennis displayed was far from championship caliber.

Pare and Shields had moments when they teamed well together, especially in the third set which they won, but most of the match Shields was driving outside or into the net on his service and was wild on back-court returns. His net game was his only strong point.

be sprung. Reveille Boy shot across the track like a bullet and moved up with Petes Wrack and Blue Larkspur in the scramble for the lead. His speed was soon spent, however.

In the meantime, Petes Wrack, owned by J. R. Macomber of New York, and Blue Larkspur, were out in front battling for the lead. Jimmy Smith, astride Blue Larkspur, held a tight grip on his mount, being content to have Petes Wrack set the early pace. Petes Wrack sped into the lead at the start and clung to it until the field had traveled three-quarters. Then Smith loosened the reins, giving Blue Larkspur his head and the Kentucky 4-year-old quickly conquered Petes Wrack.

OLYMPIC TEST FOR AMERICANS

Track Supremacy Threatened in Chicago Meet

PERCY WILLIAMS.

CHICAGO (Ill.) July 19. (Exclusive)—America's supremacy in the track-and-field sport which was seriously threatened in the Olympic Games at Amsterdam in 1928 will be put to a still further test in the fourth renewal of the games between the British Empire and the United States to be held at Soldier Field here August 27.

This meet, since its inception in 1920, has come to be regarded as the outstanding event of its kind in the world with the exception of the Olympic Games. Both nations marshall their greatest track stars for the occasion and the resultant races provide competition of the highest order.

The first meet was held following the Olympic Games of 1920 at London under the auspices of the Achilles Club. The events consisted largely of relay races to promote the spirit of team competition and the scoring system used was to count 1 point for each event won. Under this system the meet resulted in a tie.

So successful was the meet that it was repeated following the Olympic Games of 1924 and 1928, resulting in victory for the United States by scores of 11 to 3 and 8 to 6, respectively. Fourteen events are on the program, six of which are relay races. The relays are: 400-yard relay, one-mile relay, 480-yard hurdle relay, four-mile relay, two-mile relay and one-mile medley relay. The other track event is a three-mile team race in which six men from each team participate. An eight-lap steeplechase is also included in the list of events.

The field events will be six in number as follows: Pole vault, shot put, hammer throw, high jump, broad jump and javelin throw. A special 100-yard dash which will not count in the scoring is also to be run.

Officials in charge of selecting the British team frankly state their expectation to be represented by the strongest team ever assembled by the empire. The British team will be picked from the outstanding stars of ten of the dominions who will compete at the British Empire games to be held at Hamilton, Ont., August 16 to 23.

A glance at the prospective members of the team should be enough to convince the most skeptical of England's strength. Indications are that included on their team will be the following: Percy Williams, Olympic 100 and 200-meter champion; Lord David Burghley, Olympic 400-meter hurdle champion; Jack London, second in the 100-meter at Amsterdam; Wilfrid Legg of South Africa, finalist in the 100 meters at Amsterdam.

Douglas Lowe, winner of the 800 meters at Amsterdam and at Paris in 1924; Eric Liddell, Scotland, winner of the 400 meters at Paris in 1924; James Ball of Canada, second to our own Barbutti at Amsterdam in the 400 meters; Leigh Miller of Canada, who defeated all opponents in the sprints on the indoor tracks last winter; Cyril Ellis, England's great miler, a finalist at Amsterdam; Phil Edwards, former New York University star half miler, who will represent British Guiana; Alex Wilson, star quarter-miler of the University of Notre Dame and a native of Canada, and Lay, New Zealand's great javelin thrower.

To withstand the invasion of such a formidable group of performers the United States will be called upon to muster its greatest track and field stars. Every prospective college and club athlete has been urged to get in shape for the games.

The team to represent the United States will be selected at the national A.A.U. championships at Pittsburgh, August 22, 23 and 25. In the meet with the empire the United States team will compete for the first time without the handicap of ocean travel and the fatigue brought on by strenuous sectional elimination meets. For these reasons their performances will be watched with unusual interest.

Listing of all the prospective candidates for the American team would include approximately 450 names. The combination of sprint stars headed by Simpson, Tolan and backed by Bracey, Leland, Topping and many others, will command the attention of the entire world when they toe the mark against the stars of the British Empire.

Prominent among the American stars who will test their skill against the visiting British are Pete Bowen, national A. A. U. 440-yard champion; Orval Martin, national collegiate one-mile champion; Tom Warne, national collegiate pole vault record holder; Leo Lermond, star miler of the L.A.A.C.; Ed Hamm, Olympic broad jump champion and record holder; Steve Anderson, University of Washington's star hurdler; Ray Conger, star miler of the Illinois Athletic Club. Ken Rothert, Herman Brix and Eric Krenz, shot putters; Connor and Merchant in the hammer and Churchill, DeHart and Bartlett in the javelin.

Preparations are being made to handle the largest crowd ever assembled at a track meet in America. Soldier Field, with a seating capacity of over 100,000 is expected to be almost filled for the spectacle. The meet will be held at night under powerful lights and the absence of a broiling sun to annoy athletes and spectators alike, will help make conditions ideal.

The meet is being held under the auspices of the Amateur Athletic Union of the United States under the jurisdiction of its committee on foreign relations. George Getz, representing the citizens' committee, and Avery Brundage, president of the A.A.U., are serving as cochairmen of the executive committee and Sheldon Clark is chairman of the finance committee.

ARROWHEAD RACE TODAY

Annual Speedboat Regatta on Schedule at Mile-High Resort This Afternoon

With entries ranging all the way from a trim little nine-horsepower outboard motorboat to an eighty-horsepower Chris-Craft, pilots of thirty speedboats will vie for honors at Lake Arrowhead today in the annual Arrowhead regatta.

Four events are scheduled, according to Cecil Hoff, sports manager at the mile-high resort. Seven trophies will be awarded to winners by the Arrowhead Lake Company.

DICK LOYNES

Frank Fox, who will drive his eighty horsepower speed creation, is favored to win the first event which will bring together in competition nine of the fastest Chris-Craft at the lake. Fox, however, will not have a walkaway in this event, several other boats figuring to have enough steam to press him to the limit. This is a five-mile race, and numbers among the entries along with Fox, J. J. Westman, R. B. Hull, Margaret Jahns, F. F. Hamilton, Milton Goetz, R. M. Wilson, Vla Brothers and J. M. Goss.

Second on the bill is a two-mile race for nine to twelve-horsepower outboard motors. Billy Blackburn, who won this event last year, is entered as are Billy McIntyre, Dean McCumber, L. Westcott and R. Varnum.

The third event is for twelve to thirty-two horsepower outboards. Westcott, Westman, M. H. Northrup, B. J. Bastanchury and Dr. Wood are entered.

The final race of the afternoon is expected to provide the biggest display of fireworks. It is a three-mile free-for-all for the Lake Arrowhead Cup and will bring together the winners of the first three events. Considerable rivalry exists among Arrowhead Lake speedboat owners, Hoff said, and some high-powered competition is looked for in all four events.

The new high-gear, dustless State highway to the lake which eliminates the old switchbacks and stiff grades is expected to bring out a large attendance at the regatta which in former years has proved one of the most interesting and popular events on the Arrowhead Lake summer program of sports.

YACHTS STAGE HECTIC FINISH

Winning Boat and Rival Put on Real Thriller

Two Seconds Separate Two in Dash to Line

Miss Christie's Lanai Takes Third-Place Prize

BY FRANK ROCHE
"Times" Staff Representative

LOS ANGELES HARBOR, July [illegible]—Battling neck and neck like a pair of spirited thoroughbred race horses going down the stretch two crack six-meter sloops today furnished the most sensational finish ever recorded in the long history of The Times Trophy yachting classic. The two sloops were the Caprice, owned and sailed by Tommy Lee, and the Synnove, skippered by Al Rogers of the Corinthian Yacht Club. The Caprice won the race by nine seconds and only because she was able to get her spinnaker up after turning the breakwater off San Pedro [illegible] an instant or so before the Synnove's crew ran theirs up. Al Christie's Lanai was just thirty seconds behind the two leaders in the final run to the line.

TOMMY LEE.

The battle between the trim six-meter sloops for The Times [illegible] the oldest perpetual sailing prize in Southern California history, will long be remembered by those who witnessed the race. Old seadogs at the harbor, exclaimed it was the finest in years. The Caprice took a short lead at the start of the race on the Synnove and the Lanai in the run for the point Vincente marker, but Rogers's boat overhauled and passed the Lee craft before the turn was reached. Then the run for the finish line was made with the Caprice, Synnove and Lanai changing positions five or six times for the leadership.

NECK AND NECK

The Synnove and the Caprice neared the breakwater almost at the same time. It seemed as though a blanket could have been thrown over the two boats, they were so close. It was a toss-up when the bows of the two boats flashed across the finish line. The Caprice won this by an instant, taking the race with it.

The victory of the Caprice gave Tommy Lee two straight triumphs in The Times classic. He won the race last year with his six-meter sloop Harpoon. The Harpoon, incidentally, sailed in the race today under the name of the Edmada V. She finished seventh.

The race was sailed in a southwesterly breeze which kicked up a [illegible]-mile blow. The Synnove, Caprice and Lanai staged a great sailing match on the early run over the eighteen-mile course, with first one boat then the other holding an advantage.

MARIN IN VAN

Vic Dalton's eight-meter sloop Marin, winner of the King of Spain trophy last March, made the best elapsed time, Abby handled by Ben Dresden and with Ted Conrad at the helm, the Marin crossed the line in the van of the fleet of the field. She was the second boat. The Marin was unable to do better than sixth on corrected time, however.

Night Baseball Makes Wrigley Field Debut Tuesday

RECORD CROWD EXPECTED TO SEE ANGELS, SOLONS

Everything Ready for Dedication of $30,000 Plant; Stars and Indians Clash in North

BY BOB RAY

Night baseball, which has proven such a financial success up at Sacramento, makes its debut at Wrigley Field next Tuesday night and a record-breaking throng of 20,000 curious fans is expected to be on hand to see the dedication of the $30,000 lighting plant installed at the local park by William Wrigley, Jr.

Jack Lelivelt's Angels, first half champions, will inaugurate the nocturnal baseball with Buddy Ryan's Sacramento Senators supplying the opposition. The Solons will have somewhat of an edge, inasmuch as they have played four series under the giant arc lights, but the Angel forces are confident they will be able to start night baseball off here right, meaning with a victory.

JACK LELIVELT

The Angels will get their first workout under the big lights tomorrow night, a special session having been called by Skipper Lelivelt to familiarize his athletes with night sport.

The lighting system at Wrigley Field is said to be the most perfect and elaborate of any yet installed in the country. The Los Angeles club paid out twice as much for its lighting plant as Lew Moreing did to outfit the Sacramento field for night baseball and it is expected that the local park will have eliminated some of the flaws that cropped up at Sacramento.

SIX LIGHT TOWERS

A total of 136 lights have been placed around Wrigley Field to light up the diamond. Most of these giant arcs are on the six towers surrounding the playing field. One of the towers is in left field, another is in back of the right-field bleachers and the other four placed on top of the grand stand. There are sixteen lights on each of the towers, which are 120 feet tall and make the flagpole appear small in comparison. Aside from all the lights on the towers there are four placed in the bleachers, in the lower box seats and in the upper deck of the grand stand.

It is planned to start Tuesday night's game at 8 o'clock, although there is likely to be some delay because of the huge crowd expected for the contest. Tickets have been on sale for the past two mornings and will again be offered to the public after today's double-header. A box office will be kept open all day tomorrow to enable the fans to get their tickets and pick up reservations. No reservations will be kept until after Tuesday afternoon and Angel officials request the fans to pick up their tickets as early as possible.

The Coast League will be three-fourths a night league next week provided plans for night baseball are completed at Portland and Seattle in time for Tuesday's games. Both of the northwestern cities have been busy installing lighting plants and expect to have them ready in time for Tuesday's series openers.

STARS TACKLE INDIANS

Bill Lane's Hollywood Stars are scheduled to inaugurate the night game in Seattle against Ernie Johnson's Indians. The Stars have already had one fling under the arc lights at Sacramento so they'll be at no handicap in the Puget Sound city. It will be interesting to see what time they start their night games in Portland and Seattle. It will have to be later because of the twilight up there.

Red Killefer's Missions furnish the opposition for the Beavers in night baseball's debut at Portland.

The other series starting Tuesday and the only day affair will find the Oaks and Seals tangling in an important seven battles at San Francisco.

The Stars are looking forward anxiously to their coming invasion of the Northwest because they figure that they'll be able to clean up on the Indians and Ducks to such an extent that they'll pick up a big lead on the other second-half contenders.

Philly Slugger's .403 Mark Tops National League

NEW YORK, July 19. (Exclusive) Frank O'Doul and Al Simmons, the two hard-hitting gentlemen from Philadelphia, are still leading their respective leagues in clouting, according to the averages released today that include Wednesday's games.

FRANK O'DOUL

O'Doul, boasting a mark of .403, remains the National League's batting king and also has the distinction of being the only hitter in either major league, including only regulars, with an average in the ultra select .400 circle.

Simmons, leading slugger of Connie Mack's champion Athletics, had 4 points knocked off his average during the week, but his .394 mark was still good enough to set the pace for American League swatsmiths.

Chuck Klein, team-mate of O'Doul, remained in the runner-up position in the National League clouting list with an average of .397.

Crowding Simmons in the junior circuit was none other than Larrupin' Lou Gehrig, the Yankee slugger, who boasted a .382 percentage.

Following are the leading hitters in the National and American circuits.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

O'Doul, Phillies, .403; Klein, Phillies, .397; Stephenson, Cubs, .333; Herman, Robins, .388; Terry, Giants, .386; P. Waner, Pirates, .378; Hellmann, Reds, .368; Lindstrom, Giants, .353; Cuyler, Cubs, .333; Grantham, Pirates, .347.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Simmons, Athletics, .394; Gehrig, Yankees, .382; Rice, Senators, .377; Dickey, Yankees, .364; Combs, Yankees, .354; Manush, Senators, .353; Foxx, Athletics, .343.

Although he failed to get any home runs during the week, Babe Ruth still leads in his department with thirty-two. Klein leads in the National League with twenty-six, one more than Wally Berger of the Braves and Hack Wilson of the Cubs.

Cincinnati Reds and Phils Split Double-header

Comorosky, Grantham Star in 9-to-4 Pirate Win

NEW YORK, July 19. (AP)—Mancuso's home run with two on bases in the eighth inning of the second Giant-St. Louis clash today enabled the Cardinals to take a double victory over the New Yorkers, and gain an even break for the series by winning their first games of the year at the Polo Grounds. The scores were 4 to 1, and 8 to 4.

Jess Haines pitched some fine ball in the opening game, allowing only seven hits and very few of them with men on bases. Hubbell and Bell were on even terms in the second game until the Card catcher struck the winning blow. Lindsey relieved Bell and got credit for the victory. Hafey hit a homer in the ninth and Gelbert hit for the circuit in the first game.

Fillette, hurling for the Missions, won his own game in the seventh when his single scored Burns. ALEXANDER TELLS OF SUCCESSES

Reached Peak During Early Years of World War; Won Ninety-four Victories Over Three-Year Period; Hurlers Face Different System Today

BY GROVER C. ALEXANDER

(Copyright, 1930, by North American Newspaper Alliance)

(Chapter V, Alexander's Life Story)

In 1914, 1915, 1916 and thereabouts I signed contracts with clauses that stipulated I was to get $1000 extra provided I won twenty-five games. Can you imagine a pitcher signing such a contract now? I think most of them would faint at the idea.

GROVER ALEXANDER

In 1915 I won thirty-one games, losing ten. In 1916 I won thirty-three games, the most I ever won in a single season, and lost twelve. In 1917 I won thirty and lost thirteen. That gave me a three-year total of ninety-four victories and thirty-five defeats.

In those days if the Phillies went out and got me two or three runs in the first inning I put that down in my mind as a victory. Don't think I eased up. I worked just as hard; but I felt safe with a lead like that. In the last ten years I don't think pitchers have felt safe with an eight-run lead. But they had pitchers in the old days. Remember Mathewson, Marquard and that crowd; how often did a club get more than a couple of runs off them?

In 1916 I scored sixteen shutouts, and I consider that one of the greatest achievements of my career.

It could just as well have been more. I can remember at least four or five games of that season in which we had the other club beaten in the ninth, and I had a shutout up to that point. And if I had pitched for shutouts, I know I could have had more of them.

At that time if a man got on base in the ninth and we had the game won we would let him run, because under the scoring rules existing then he was credited with a stolen base. They still let them run under similar conditions today, but they do not get a stolen base under present scoring rules unless an effort is made to put them out.

When runners would get on against me I would nod to them to run, and while I wound up they would go down. Once I tipped a runner off to run and I wound up long enough for him to go from first to third on one pitch. He was credited with two stolen bases.

Often enough those men scored I would let them go around from first to third, and perhaps the next man would hit a fly to the outfield to bring him in, or he would score while the batter was being thrown out. If I had chosen to bear down I could have held the other team runless that last inning.

SATISFIED TO WIN

But it never occurred to me at the time that I was running up a lot of shutouts. We just considered them games won and lost in those days. If I won I was satisfied.

During those seasons I won all my games by starting and pitching the full nine innings. I don't remember ever going in to finish up for the other pitchers. Yet if a pitcher pitches even twenty full games today, win or lose, it is considered a real feat.

At the same time, the game has changed so much that I doubt if it would be possible to pitch today as we pitched in the old days, with this lively ball. I faced some pretty good hitters in my day. I pitched to Wagner and Lajoie, Doyle and Speaker, and if I pitched the same way to hitters not as good today the ball would be sailing over the fences in short order.

I had a good fast one and a good curve. That was my equipment for my first few years. I stuck them through there and let the batters take a chance on hitting them. It was not until about ten years after I came up that I started cutting the corners of the plate.

I could put the ball through, and even if the batter hit it pretty solidly there was a good chance the outfielders would get it. Now, if a ball is hit with the same force, it is hammered up against the fence or over it.

Most of the pitchers I see today hold the ball with their surest grip possible, and I took advantage of every chance afforded by the ball to do so. I have always held all of my deliveries the same.

You see, I didn't want to tip anything off. We used to have coaches who watched the pitcher to learn everything possible from his actions. Oscar Dugey was a good coach of this type. He wasn't much of a player, but he was clever at tipping off the batter. Oscar noticed that some pitchers held a curve with the fingers across the seams, a fast one with the fingers on the seams. He had a word sign with the batters, and I can tell you it was pretty nice to stand up there and know whether a curve or a fast one was coming.

USED CURVE BALL

When I started I had enough speed and a good enough curve to keep them from hitting much, and I don't worry about anything else. I depended mainly on the fast one, and although I threw the curve, too, the hitters said that all I pitched looked alike when they came up.

Hans Wagner once said to me: "No matter how far I chase that curve of yours it always seems a little farther out. It just keeps on going."

That was one for me on Wagner, but he had it coming for one he used to pull on me. The first time I hit a ball down to him I took it sort of easy on my way to first, and the ball got there just ahead of me.

"Ah," I thought. "If I had hurried a little I would have beaten that one. I'll beat the next one."

So the next time I hit to Wagner I hurried, but I heard the ball hit the first-baseman's mit just before I got there. "Not quite fast enough," I thought.

But in the end I found out that no matter how I ran, fast or slow, Wagner always had the ball there a fraction of a second ahead of me, so I stopped thinking about it.

It was about 1917 when I began trying to pitch to certain spots for the weaknesses of the batters. Not so much then, however, as later. Even when I first began to try that I could put the ball pretty near where I wanted it. I always could get the ball over the plate when it was necessary, and then I found I could cut the corners. I can't say how I developed control. It seems to me that was a gift.

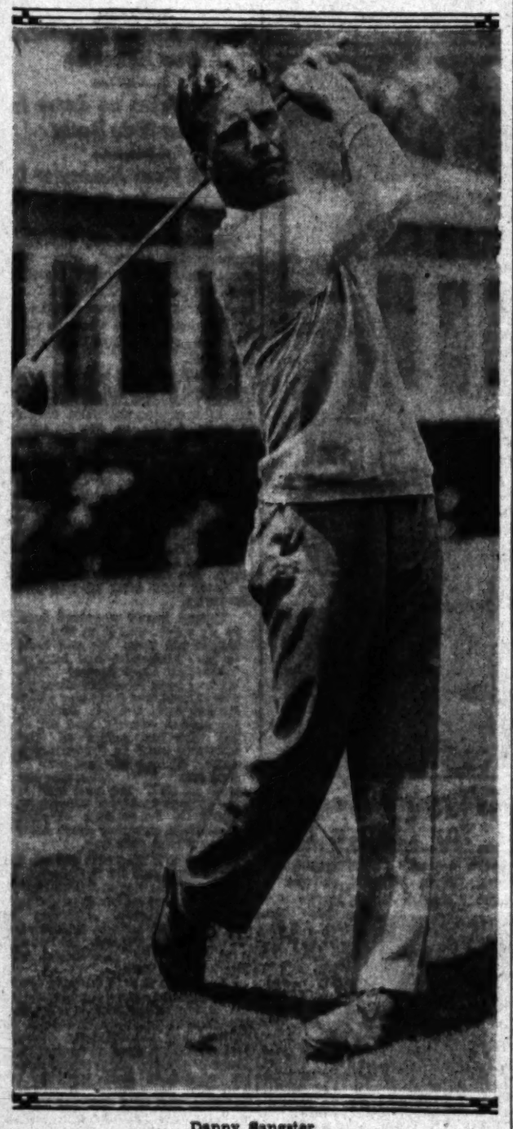
In my later years I depended more upon control than upon anything else. I never bothered with the spit ball or any freak deliveries. If a pitcher has a good fast one, a curve and a fair amount of control, he doesn't need them.

Despite all of my shutouts and my other pitching successes I never had the good fortune to pitch a no-hit game. I had several one-hit games, three or four in that 1916 season.

The closest I ever came to a no-hit game was in St. Louis. I went to the point where two were out in the ninth before it was spoiled. I was ahead about 3 to 0, and Bruno Betzel, who played second base and was a rather weak hitter, hit one over second base as perfectly as if the catcher had thrown it. Merkle ruined another for me near the finish of a game with the Giants

SANGSTER WINS IN NORTH

Favored to Win Junior Tournament



Danny Sangster

Strong Field Expected for Amateur Play

DEL MONTE, July 19.—Pacific Coast golfers are evincing unusual interest in this year's California amateur golf championship, which will take place on four great golf courses in the vicinity of Del Monte, Cal., on September 1-7. The usual North-vs.-South team matches and other preliminary events will take place August 30-31, the week preceding the State championship proper. The Del Monte championship for women is set for September 3-7.

H. CHANDLER EGAN

The California championship always attracts the pick of the Pacific Coast stars, including such famous Oregonians as Don Moe, Dr. Oscar Willing, Chandler Egan, Frank Dolph, Rudie Wilhelm and Malcolm McNaughton. Chuck Hunter and Ben Stein of Washington State rarely miss a California tourney. Francis Brown, former Hawaiian champion and famous all over the world as a shatterer of course records, was the first to send in his entry for this year's California championship. Texas, Oklahoma, Utah, Colorado and other western States will again be represented.

All of the par shooters in California are expected to be on hand, as this year's California dates do not conflict with the national amateur (September 22-27.) Jack Neville of Pebble Beach will defend the title of California amateur champion, which he now holds for the sixth time.

DEL MONTE, July 19. (AP)—Dan Sangster, 17 years of age, of Los Angeles, will oppose Curtis Williams, Long Beach lad, in tomorrow's thirty-six-hole finals here for the California junior golf championship.

Two down at the fifth, Sangster uncorked a barrage of birdies and pars to recover his lead and defeat Louis Cass, Jr., of Los Angeles, 6 and 5, in today's semifinal match. Williams won from Don Edwards, San Jose, 4 and 3.

WESTWOOD VILLAGE TO HAVE ANOTHER COURSE

The popular Village Golf Club in Westwood, which has been heavily patronised all summer, is going to branch out. Marvin Hall and his associates, Fred and Bob Wade, started work last week on another miniature course right across the street from their first layout.

According to Hall, the new course will be the most modern and up to date in the city. None of the holes will be similar to those now being played on the Village course. The layout will be one of the biggest built, going in on a lot which is 400 feet by 200 feet.

Hall's first course has proved attractive to thousands of local players. His best day was on the 4th inst., when the intake was approximately $1100.

Miss Helen Lawson of Wilshire, who is traveling in the East at present, will come home by way of Kansas City to give the Southland three strong entries in the championship, which will be played over the Hillcrest Country Club course. Mrs. Leon Pressler of San Gabriel, western champion in 1927 and 1928, is not expected to compete this year.

PROFESSIONALS COMPETE AT LOS ANGELES

Los Angeles will be host to professionals of the Pacific Southwest P.G.A. tomorrow in an eighteen-hole sweepstakes. Points will be scored toward the A. K. Bourne diamond medal, according to Ernest Martin, chairman of the tournament committee.

"TERRIBLES" HOLD TOURNEY ON CATALINA COURSE

Thirty-two members of the "Terrible Twenty" played thirty-six holes over the Catalina course last Tuesday. They were accompanied by five guests.

Al Maurer was low for eighteen holes with a fine 37. Claude Beelman, Paul Elm and Ralph Phillips tied for second place with scores of 38.

Pros Qualify for National Championship

Qualifying rounds for the national P.G.A. championship will be played over thirty-six holes at the Potrero Country Club on Monday, the 28th inst., according to Secretary J. A. (Pat) Patterson of the Pacific Southwest P.G.A.

Southern California has been allotted four places in the national event. Professionals desiring to play in the qualifying test are urged by Patterson to send in their entries as soon as possible to facilitate the making of pairings. The entry fee of $5 may be paid at the first tee.

BIG FIELD ANTICIPATED FOR ANNUAL TOURNEY

Picturesque Course in Fine Shape; Match Play Starts Friday and Continues Through Sunday

BY EDWARD LAWRENCE

Picturesque Palos Verdes, whose verdant beauty is second to none in Southern California, holds its annual invitation golf tournament this week. A qualifying round of eighteen holes may be played either Wednesday or Thursday; match play starts on Friday and continues through Sunday.

One of Billy Bell's first courses and one of his finest, Palos Verdes, offers a virile test of golf. Jimmy Finks, Palos Verdes' well-known professional, reports that the course has been enjoying increasingly heavy play, although only those who are members and guests are permitted on the course. Last Sunday established a new record for the course and Jimmy is looking forward to an entry of more than 300 for the invitational.

ERNIE COMBS

With the weather man promising a continuance of the recent warm weather, the Palos Verdes tournament is most timely. Situated in the Palos Verdes hills overlooking the Pacific, cool ocean breezes temper the warmest days and make a round of golf the more enjoyable.

As a special feature of the qualifying play, Don Lawyer and Les Henry, the latter secretary of the club, have planned a Calcutta dinner on Thursday evening, following the medal returns.

Play is limited to ten flights of sixteen and there will be two rounds of match play on Friday, one in the morning and second-round matches in the afternoon. Semifinals are scheduled on Saturday, with the finals in all flights on Sunday morning.

There will be the usual low gross and low net trophies for the qualifying round and prizes for winners and runners-up in each flight.

Among the interesting features planned for the tournament are an eighteen-hole medal play tournament for members of greens committees of the Southern California Golf Association for a cup presented by the Palos Verdes greens committee, an eighteen-hole consolation round on Saturday, mixed foursomes, selective drive on Sunday and best scores of twosomes playing in foursomes for eighteen holes.

The Palos Verdes tournament promises to be one of the most interesting and popular of the year, as Palos Verdes members are noted for their ability as hosts and the course is in splendid condition.

Golfers who have not played Palos Verdes for some time will undoubtedly be surprised at the strides that have been made in conditioning the layout. Under the direction of Ike Sample, chairman of the greens, the putting surfaces have been nursed along to perfection and rank with the best in Southern California. The entire course from tees to greens is in the "pink."

Among the entries already received are a number of prominent golfers, including Ernie Combs, Jr., Rex Balles, Ed Jones, Clay Cheney, Fred Aberle, Harold Dimitrik, Al Gruber, George Ramsey, L. B. Harbour, Tom Endicott, Phil Ayres, Gene Brown, Harry Eichelberger, Jr., and others.

Entries can be made by calling TUcker 3343.

PASADENA TO STAGE TOURNEY

Annual Invitation Event Scheduled for Next Month at Brookside Park

Pasadena's second annual city golf championship will be played over the municipal course at Brookside Park the first week in August, according to an announcement made yesterday.

A. K. BOURNE

A qualifying round of eighteen holes may be played on Saturday, Sunday or Monday, August 2, 3 or 4. Match play starts on Tuesday and continues until Friday.

As usual, the championship flight will be at scratch, while all others play at handicap. There will be prizes for the winners and runners-up in each flight in addition to low gross and low net trophies for the qualifying flight.

All amateurs are invited to play in the tournament and entries can be made by calling WAkefield 2813 or writing the Pasadena municipal golf course.

A. K. Bourne of Midwick, who has always taken an interest in Pasadena events, is expected to be among the prominent entrants, along with H. B. Wesbrook of Annandale.

PATHE STUDIOS STAGE ANNUAL TOURNEY

Johnny Joseph Mescall will be favored to win the annual Pathe studios tournament which will be played today over the golf course of the Fox Hills Country Club. Mescall, one of the finest low-handicap amateurs in Southern California, is champion of the Fox Hills club. The tournament is open to players from all departments of the Pathe studios, and executives, stars, directors and other employees will intermingle in the competition. Among the entrants are E. B. Derr, C. E. Sullivan, William Boyd, Eddie Quillan, Robert Armstrong, Harry Bannister, Ray Rockett and Harvey Leavitt. A. L. Domike is chairman of the tournament committee.

PASATIEMPO COURSE BEING REVAMPED

Bob Mucks writes that Marion Hollins's Pasatiempo course is undergoing slight changes under the direction of Dr. Alister MacKenzie, who constructed the Cypress Point course. MacKenzie is revamping the ninth and eleventh greens, bringing the par down to 73, or possibly 72. Play has been brisk over the noted Santa Cruz course, according to Mucks.

JOHNSTON MASTER WITH SPOON

National Amateur Champion Has Rare Skill in Handling Handy Wooden Club; Use of This Stroke Gave Him Victories in Walker Cup Play Two Years Ago

BY SOL METZGER

A spoon shot is an extremely handy golf stroke to have working for you. We know of one young man, quite a boxer by the way, who has the happy faculty of bringing his into play to close stiff golf arguments that have attracted international attention these past twenty-five years or so. The gentleman so skilled in wielding this bit of wood is Harrison R. Johnston, ranking U. S. amateur golf champion, the player who gave Jones the big scare in the recent British amateur after being apparently out of the picture in their match.

Two years ago at the Walker Cup matches, played over the Chicago Golf Club links at Wheaton, Jimmy Johnston was going great guns with his spoon. Because of his accuracy with it he ended the Scotch foursome battle in which he was paired with Francis Ouimet, by a magnificent second that wound up dead at the pin on a par 5 hole for an eagle 3. The very next day he came through in a tough singles encounter with another such shot for a birdie on a par 4 affair.

All in all Jimmy Johnston knows his spoon better than an infant. But it remained for him to produce his greatest of all spoon shots in the recent British amateur. In his encounter with Bernard Darwin, the British golf writer who plays almost as well as he scribbles, Jimmy came to the long seventeenth, the famous "Road Hole" of St. Andrews, one up on his opponent.

They both whacked mighty drives down this 457-yard affair, Darwin having the edge by approximately a foot. So close were their balls that Darwin lifted his in order to let Johnston go to it. When Johnston prepared to do this very thing, Darwin figured the hole won, for Jimmy selected his spoon for the 240 yards of distance remaining to the cup, instead of taking an iron and playing safe to hold his 1 up lead with a half.

All of which goes to prove two things. First, that Darwin does not know the American games of going after everything, the game that has enabled our players to mop up the British these past few years. Second, that Darwin himself is much more of a golf writer than a reader. Had he the correct dope on Johnston's ability with the spoon he would, instead of having hopes for the hole and for the match, merely have taken the short cut to the clubhouse.

Jimmy may have selected the wrong club for Darwin, under the conditions, but it certainly proved the correct one for him. His second with it fell just short of the green and trickled on so close that it was a "gimme" for an eagle 3. That was all there was to it. Johnston won 2 and 1 when his ball came to rest.

Trabue Named New Manager at Arrowhead

Announcement was made late yesterday by officials of the Arrowhead Lake Company that A. E. D. Trabue, prominent Southern California golf expert, has accepted a position as manager of the Arrowhead golf course. Trabue, it was announced, will take immediate charge and plans to start work at once on numerous improvement projects on the course.

Trabue was secretary and manager of the Hollywood Country Club. He also, constructed and was for four years manager of the Big Bear Lake Golf and Country Club course. Mrs. Trabue also is prominent in golf circles. She is a golf writer of note and is honorary president of the women's auxiliary of the Southern California Golf Association. She also is chairman of the women's committee of the United States Golf Association.

Lou Owen, professional at the club, will be retained, Trabue announced.

PROFESSIONALS FAVOR BOBBY IN NATIONAL AMATEUR EVENT

Will Bobby Jones win the national amateur championship and thus acquire the four major golf titles of 1930?

"Sure," said Olin Dutra of Brentwood.

OLIN DUTRA

"Without doubt," said Mortie Dutra of Virginia, and then Willie I. Hunter of Montebello Park joined in:

"When you win the United States open you can win anything, let alone the national amateur."

These three Southern California professionals, who returned last week from Minneapolis, where they represented the Southland in the open at Interlachen, were loud in their praises of Bobby Jones. Incidentally, they managed to make a splendid group showing, and will not be required to qualify for the open next year as the result of finishing well up among the low thirty.

Mortie and Hunter finished with scores of 303, while Olin, despite one bad round, had a score of 305 for the 72 holes.

Fred Morrison of Midwick, who completed the Southland's "big four" in the East, will return soon. Fred went on to New York from Interlachen to visit Bob Honeyman.

Billy Townsend Seeks Revenge in Rematch With Joey Medill at Olympic Tomorrow

LIGHTWEIGHTS RESUME FEUD

Vancouver Slugger Out to Redeem Himself

Chicago Boxer Upsets Dope in First Meeting

Rivals Expected to Enter Ring at Even Money

BY KAY OWE

Speedy Joey Medill, despised short-ender when he fought Billy Townsend two weeks ago, comes back in a rematch at even money Monday night.

JACK DOYLE.

The Olympic has switched its fight date this week from Tuesday to Monday night to keep out of the path of the night baseball opening. The club will probably take the regular Tuesday afterward.

Fans greatly underestimated Medill here two weeks ago. Perhaps they overlooked the fact that the stocky Chicagoan had stepped out last year and beaten such top-notchers as Stanislaus Loyaza twice, Tommy Grogan and others.

Townsend, on the other hand, had just made three of the most sensational fights Promoter Jack Doyle's patrons had seen for a long time. For the first half of the fight Townsend, trying to set himself for a right-hand knockout, couldn't catch the windmilling Medill. They tacked the name of "Little Harry Greb" onto Medill back East and he lived up to it here.

LIKES REBOUNDS

Townsend has a yen for rematches. The only fighters who ever defeated the Canadian as he was growing up had decisions reversed in later fights. Jack Allan points to the showing of Townsend in the two Armando Santiago scraps here. Santiago floored Townsend and both were out on their feet at the end of the fifth round from a near double knockout connection at the bell.

Santiago fainted. Townsend didn't. That was about the only difference to the ring classic which had the spectacular ending. But in the rematch Townsend took charge of the Cuban at the start. He floored Santiago a couple of times and then knocked him out. The case of Townsend is not much different from that of his more famous fellow-townsman, Jimmy McLarnin. The little Irish lad went right-hand crazy for a time and tried to win quick with a kayo.

Townsend was overconfident in the Medill bout—flushed with his thrilling knockouts over Wildcat Carter and Santiago. He was waiting for one punch.

But Medill was giving him a boxing lesson until the later rounds when the Canadian slowed him down with body punches and had solved his style.

EVEN STEVEN

Townsend was a 2-to-1 favorite the first fight and he probably will be no worse than even money in the rematch.

Both Medill and Townsend overshot the weight two weeks ago. They were matched at 140 pounds. Medill came in at 143 and Townsend at 141½.

They are in fine shape and a sensational win for either means a great deal. Townsend would like to fight McLarnin. The Olympic offered Jimmy $20,000 to fight Vancouver Billy, but it was turned down.

The fight resolves itself into a proposition whether a boxer can beat a puncher and Townsend is out to vindicate himself from the first defeat when the puncher couldn't connect.

Jimmy Hanna, the Idaho boy who has developed into a puncher in his last two fights, meets Les Rammage, San Diego light-heavyweight, in the six-round semi-wind-up under Townsend and Medill.

Rammage is a new face at the Olympic. He stopped Jimmy McDermott at Hollywood some time ago. Rammage boasts a record of thirty fights with twenty knockouts and of having never lost a decision. He is 19 years of age. Hanna stopped Bud Doyle and Wally Fraser his last two Olympic starts.

Sammy Seamans and Chalky Wright box the six-round special event. The two fours are Marcelino Lomeli vs. Richie Parr and Steve Hamas vs. Hugh Shropshire.

CAN A SLUGGER BEAT A BOXER?

That's the all-important question that Billy Townsend will attempt to answer tomorrow night with his powerful fists. Billy, a terrific hitter, is meeting Joey Medill, master boxer, in a rematch at the Olympic. Medill upset the dope badly in the first meeting when he offset the hitting ability of Townsend with his fast boxing. Townsend claims he will catch Joey this time and stop him.

DEMPSEY BOON TO RING

Boxing Interest Soars Whenever ex-Champion Floats Into Town Anywhere

BY RUSSELL J. NEWLAND

SAN FRANCISCO, July 19. (AP)—Jack Dempsey floats back into town and boxing interest zooms up like favored stocks on a bull market.

The one-time Manassa Mauler throws a banquet for the boys, as is his custom, and old-timers who have a l w a y s tracked themselves off the main fistic highway f o r many months appear as suddenly as they disappeared. It is a fine spread t h e ex-champ puts on, b u t his friends are not there so much to eat as to cut up old touches.

JACK DEMPSEY

Dempsey retains his hold on the public's imagination like no other has before or since his rule. He has a way of doing things that will keep his followers together, always. One of Jack's old friends shuffles in, a bit downcast and somewhat seedy. Dempsey spots the newcomer and notes his condition. "What's the matter with so-and-so?" he asks someone he is talking to. "Oh, he has had a run of tough luck," is the reply.

"We haven't seen much of him lately." Big Jack goes over, shakes hands with the seedy one, slaps him on the back, and they laugh over old times. Things have brightened up for the chap who was a bit out of luck, but why shouldn't he smile during the dinner? That "five-century note," as the boys refer to the $500 bill, tucked away in his pocket has put a rosy outlook on life.

Joe is sick in the hospital and cannot be present this time. Dempsey interrupts the proceedings long enough to call him personally on the telephone.

Up at the head of the table, tall George Sharkey cackles in his peculiar way. He is one of Dempsey's oldest and closest friends, and could, if so minded, tell many tales about the black-thatched, restless young fellow who began to shape up on the fistic horizon here in 1917. Sharkey owned an express wagon then, but wasn't doing much in the way of business. Many a morning, D. helped S. hustle trunks until they had enough breakfast money. When Dempsey won the title from Willard, and for every championship fight since then, Sharkey's mail brought him a pair of choice-seat tickets. Sharkey is now proprietor of a duck-shooting club near Colusa.

And so it goes! Every time "Jack the Demp" comes to town, it is a signal for mustering of the old gang. Everybody has a good time.

FOUL EDICT LIKELY TO AID SPORT

Boxing Followers Agree That Some Good is Due from Recent Ruling

CHICAGO, July 19. (Exclusive)—The New York State Athletic Commission's recent edict against fouls in boxing has stirred the fistic fraternity the country over. There is now unanimity on the proposition that the Gotham regulations will help the sport—or the racket—take your choice.

It is contended that under the New York rule anything will go in the ring. It is claimed that knowledge that low blows will not terminate bouts will result in tactics which for unfairness will go far beyond anything that has occurred in the past.

Chairman James A. Farley of the New York commission says such a conclusion is foolish. He declares the solons will continue to have full control of the actions of all boxers and will be in a position to penalize any who are guilty of infractions.

"We have no intention of allowing 'anything to go,' says Farley. "After our new rule is clarified I am sure it will work out to the satisfaction of all concerned.

"If the referee believes a man is deliberately fouling it will be possible for him to disqualify the offender. Boxers judged guilty of deliberate low punching or gouging will be subject to revocation of their licenses and fines up to $5000."

Regardless of how the new rule may be accepted, it is an indication that serious thought is being given to the necessity of cleaning up boxing and doing away with a practice that has become decidedly obnoxious. No doubt some good will come of the present agitation.

ROWING GIANTS

Cornell University's winning varsity crew this year averaged 185 pounds, while seven of the eight junior varsity oarsmen weighed 180 or better and five of the freshmen rowers ranged between 185 and 190.

MILLER TOPS BOUT CARD

Benny Featured by Hollywood Stadium in Clash With Romeo Le Mon Friday Night

Benny Miller, Los Angeles' latest welterweight contender, occupies the spotlight Friday night at the Hollywood American Legion Stadium when he takes on a youngster from Santa Ana named Romeo Le Mon.

Miller, who was developed in the same school that gave Jackie Fields, Mushy Callahan and Fidel La Barba to the fight g a m e, has jumped into the front ranks of t h e welterweights on the Coast since the first of the year. In his last fight at Hollywood he gave a sensational performance in beating Bud Anderson, San J o s e puncher.

BENNY MILLER

In Le Mon, Miller is boxing a boy who has been a big hit at Santa Ana and other smaller clubs. He is making his first bid for recognition in big-time circles Friday. He is touted as a good one by the boys in the sticks. Miller will determine just how good he is the local experts State. They box ten rounds.

Red Humphries and Jimmy Alvarado clash in the semi-wind-up at 33 pounds.

RAHMING AND SPORT TO TANGLE WEDNESDAY

Leonard Rahming and Young Sport have been signed for an eight-round main event at the Ocean Park boxing arena Wednesday night, the 23rd inst., according to an announcement by Promoter Claude Bridge.

In the semi-wind-up Bob Cano meets "K. O." Billy Wagner at the middleweight mark. Wagner is a slight favorite. He kayoed his last five opponents in the Ocean Park ring. Two other four-round fights are on the card. Benny Stein meets Ted Daniels at 152 pounds and Al Garcia goes against George Starr, at 33 pounds.

Wiggins Ready for House Go

After a week's postponement because Chuck Wiggins suffered a slight ptomaine attack Morrie Cohan has the stage set for the Wiggins - Mack House bout at Pasadena Arena Thursday night.

CHUCK WIGGINS

The postponement has worked to the advantage of Wiggins. Had the b o u t gone through as originally scheduled t h e Hoosier h e a v y w e i g h t would have had but six days to work after driving from Indiana to Los Angeles. Now he will have the benefit of ten days' training while House will merely mark time trying to retain the edge of condition he reached before the postponement was necessary.

The bout is the biggest attraction Cohan has ever lined up for his exclusive little Pasadena club. House is one of the hardest hitters among the heavyweights. White heavyweights have been dodging him for many months. Wiggins has boxed the mail from Tunney and Tom Gibbons down to Stribling and Carnero. Ray Alvis, manager of Jack Thompson, manages Wiggins.

INDOOR FOOTBALL

The proposed intercollegiate football game to be played in the Convention Hall in Atlantic City, N. J., between Lafayette and Washington-Jefferson universities, next October 25, will be held on the floor of the huge assembly room of the building. To cover a field, 500 feet long and 300 feet wide, to a proper depth, fifteen freight cars of dirt will be hauled.

Bozeman and Chamaco Mix

J. N. Bozeman and Joe Chamaco will finally meet in their long-deferred three-cushion match. These two youngsters are the MAX BAER and Frankie Campbell of billiards on the Coast, and are probably the two most promising players at the angle game to be developed in the last five years.

Bozeman is from Vallejo, and three years ago startled the billiard world by winning the national amateur three-cushion title without the loss of a game. He was nosed out by Charles Jordan of Los Angeles the following year, and then entered the professional ranks. Bozeman is playing the best billiards of his career at the present time, as shown by his recent defeat of Welker Cochran.

Chamaco needs no introduction to Los Angeles billiardists. Developed in this city and never taking part in national competition, he is nevertheless known from coast to coast in the billiard world. Pronounced by experts as "greater than Maupome," he is one of the most colorful players of today.

GEORGE CHOICE IN MAT CLASH

Former Amateur Expected to Beat Malcewicz

Wycoff Takes on Lutze in Other Main Battle

Strelich Faces Newcomer in Opening Bout

Tiger Joe Malcewicz, the slick, slippery mat veteran who first proved how good Everett Marshall was by losing to him in a ...al bout, comes west again to take on another young hope when he faces Don George in the Olympic Wednesday night.

Marshall was just a bright young man when he stepped into the ring against Malcewicz. When he stepped out, after tossing the Utica Panther in straight falls, he was an established star. George has that same chance.

The former Michigan amateur, who was a member of Uncle Sam's Olympic forces, has been a professional grappler since last November, and has yet to lose a bout. In his local competition he has beaten Dan Koloff, Stanley Stasiak, Nick Lutze and L. Wycoff in successive starts. Marshall didn't beat Stasiak or Lutze until after he had faced Malcewicz.

George hasn't appeared here in six weeks, and is in fine fettle for the bout. He will have to be. Malcewicz has been a topnotcher since around 1920. He has been wrestling since he was 17, and was a big star at 18. He has battled Lewis, Caddock, Dr. Roller, Stecher, and all of the other big noises of the wrestling game in the past few years. He was the first man to beat Marin Plestina, turning the trick in 1927. His best hold is his famous backward body slam, and both Lutze and Plestina have been stretcher cases after being tossed that way.

Malcewicz is 30 years old at the present time, but he is regarded as a veteran. He has met and beaten most of the top-notchers of the past and present decade. Although he weighs but 200 pounds, he possesses the strength of a giant. He handled such giants as Ed Lewis and Plestina with ease.

The Utican is back in form again. The snap and speed he showed in his first matches here has marked his training work for this bout. If he hook and tosses George with the backward body slam as he has been the pair of light heavyweight trainers who have been working out with him, the former University of Michigan mat star will not have a chance to use any kind of a defense against the knockout grip.

Malcewicz is certain to extend George to the limit. George will have a chance to show if he is ready for all-comers. This match, as well as the one preceeding it, is expected to be packed with speed, action, and clean, sensational wrestling.

Lutze faces Wycoff in the other half of Lou Daro's double bill, both main bouts being two-out-of-three-fall affairs. Wycoff is a slight favorite because of the better showing he has made against Marshall. Wycoff gave the airplane spin expert a great battle. He has a habit of working fast against fast opponents which means that he should adopt whirlwind tactics in the bout with Lutze. The latter is in condition again, following an operation for a knee injury, and is confident he will be ready to put forth his best efforts. Popular as he is, Lutze is expected to fall before the former amateur's attack.

In the opener, Steve Strelich, the "Terrible Swede," hoops up with Joe Stamalty in a one-fall affair. Joe is a former boxer, and when aroused forgets what ring he is in, and starts throwing punches. Strelich is just the type to make him angry.

HE WHO SMILES FIRST

It's Joe Malcewicz, crafty Utica Panther, looking over Don George's wrestling record with a cynical grin on his face. These two clash in the final feature event of Lou Daro's mat show at the Olympic Wednesday night. Evidently George's record does not impress Joe very much. Neither did it impress Koloff, Stasiak, Lutze and Wycoff. They were, however, beaten by the youthful George, Lutze and Wycoff meet in the other finish bout on the card.

YACHTING CLASSIC AHEAD

Combined Pacific Coast and Southern California Regattas to be Staged at Newport

BY FRANK ROCHE

What already looms as the finest yachting classic in the history of the sailing sport on the slope is just around the corner on the summer sports program. The event is the combined Pacific Coast and Southern California sailing championships and it is scheduled to take place off Newport Harbor from August 4 to August 9.

The largest fleet of racing yachts ever to participate in a regatta on this Coast is expected to be on the scene when the committee boat sounds the starting gun the opening day just outside of the picturesque Newport Harbor.

JOSEPH BEEK

Sailing craft from every yachting center along the Coast will be represented in the combined regattas. The last event of this importance staged in Southland waters was in 1927 at Santa Barbara. It drew a record field then, but next month's affair will outstrip it in every way Newport Harbor Yacht Club officials declare.

From as far north as Puget Sound and as far south as San Diego amateur sailormen will come to Newport to seek laurels in the championships. E. L. (Ted) Geary and his R-sloop Sir Tom is the entry from the great Northwest. At least a dozen or more boats will represent the Border City of the Southland.

San Francisco yachtsmen will be on deck with both feet for the championships, Newport Harbor officials have been assured. The first Pacific Coast championship regatta was staged in San Francisco in 1923, which will make the coming classic the eighth of its kind. The Southern California title series is in its tenth year. The combining of the two means retaining the best features of each championship.

Every class of racing yacht on the Coast roster will play a part on the program. Majestic looking schooners that boast what looks like acres of sail down to skimmers and starletts that seem to go with a shirtail as canvas will be in the action arranged by the regatta committees.

The fast eight-meter R and six-meter sloops will, of course, figure in the spotlight during the six days of racing. Even the power cruisers will come in for their share of competition. A race around Catalina Island has been planned for the cruisers during the regatta. A gold cup will go to the winner of that event.

An interesting item in connection with the regatta came to light yesterday in the announcement that a new class called the Pacific Coast design will be introduced in the championship series. San Diego has six boats thirty feet over all in this class.

Los Angeles Harbor, of course, will have the bulk of the boats in the combined regattas. The huge fleet of racing yachts from the California Yacht Club, Los Angeles Yacht Club and Catalina Island Yacht Club are being primed now in week-end sailing tilts for the Newport classic.

All in all, everything seems to point to a gala sailing carnival which should make history for yachting on this Coast. Commodore Beek, Jim Webster, Paul Hiller and other Southern California yachting leaders are shaping the program details daily, so that all will be smooth sailing once the classic gets under way.

Sharp Winner in Auto Races

Jimmy Sharp, the boy who wins and loses with a smile, had a big day or rather a big night at the American Legion Speedway track last evening. Jimmy celebrated the opening of the night automobile racing program at the Ascot bowl by winning three of the events on the card, one of them being the forty-lap feature. Sharp also captured the Helmet dash and a ten-lap event before leaving the track for the night.

A crowd of 6000 greeted the knights of gas and oil as they rolled on the track for the opening event. Sharp's driving was the outstanding performance of a card of fine racing.

Swede Smith won a ten-lap dash as did Mel McKee.

The results:

40-lap feature won by Jimmy Sharp. Francis Quinn, second; Speed Hinckley, third. Time 20m. 22 4-5s.

Helmet dash—Won by Jimmy Sharp. Orval Brenmeyer, second; Swede Smith, third.

10-lap race—Won by Swede Smith. Francis Quinn, second; Orval Brenmeyer, third.

10-lap race—Won by Mel McKee. Speed Hinckley, second; Ted Simpson, third.

10-lap race—Won by Jimmy Sharp. Carl Ryder, second; Art Hines, third.

BRAIN VS. BRAWN

Monte Weaver, one of the regular pitchers with the Baltimore Orioles, gave up a professorship in mathematics at the University of Virginia to play baseball.

FEMALE SHOOTER PROVES MORE DEADLY THAN MALE

BISLEY (Eng.) July 19. (AP)—A woman who drove an army motor car during the World War, Miss Marjorie Foster, defeated many of the crack marksmen of the British Empire to win the King's prize for rifle shooting on the famous Bisley ranges today.

Not only is Miss Foster the first woman ever to achieve this feat, but she is the only member of her sex ever to place among the final 100 competitors in this event. She is the manager of a chicken farm near Bisley. Her score of 280 was a single point better than that of Lieut. A. E. Eccles of the Seaford Highlanders. Miss Foster won a cash prize of $1250 in addition to the National Rifle Association's highly coveted gold medal and gold badge.

Shooting as "Driver Foster" since, as she is a member of the British Women's Legion and the event is open only to service members, Miss Foster fired with amazing skill and nerve. At the very close of the competition she was called on to make the most difficult shot of the tournament.

Lieut. Eccles posted his total when Miss Foster had two shots to go. If she scored two "inners," shots just outside the bull's-eye that counted 4 points apiece, she would have ended in a tie with Lieut. Eccles. Using a service rifle at 1000 yards, she scored one inner, while the bulk of the crowd stood behind her in tense silence. She fired her last shot and scored a clean bull's-eye.

Miss Foster's victory was all the more amazing because of the day-to-day strain of the classic tourney. The King's prize competition is designed as a thorough test of marksmanship at many ranges and is as nerve-racking a test as any open golf tournament. The competition has been going on since Wednesday.

She thus became the third woman in a trio of Englishwomen who have made their sex famous by feats of skill and endurance this year. Miss Amy Johnson flew from England to Australia and Miss Betty Brown trounced the male opposition in winning the King's cup air race.

CAULIFLOWER ALLEY NOTES

The Olympic Auditorium throws its doors open next Tuesday night to a rematch between Joey Medill and Billy Townsend. The last bout was in the same arena hardly a month ago. Medill being awarded a close decision over his man. The battle was regarded by many of the spectators as one of the most sensational ever pulled off at the famous Doyle pavilion of punch. Hardly had the ballyhoo stores wax cold when a return match was hinted at by the majority of those present. Col. Doyle, heeding the general solicitations, had the two warriors on the dotted line again. Townsend wasn't a bit satisfied over the result. He told his manager that he was sure he could reverse the verdict if another bout in the near future could be arranged.

As for Medill, he feels that he will cop the laurels by a wider margin next Tuesday night, basing his belief on the fact that he had not been off the cary very long when he first met Townsend, and that just now he is fully acclimated and will go the ten rounds stronger than he did about a month ago. All things taken into consideration, the fans are sure to have another treat in store for them when Joey and Billy fly at each other. The consolidation of expert opinion is that Medill will prevail again, but, of course, this remains to be seen. Both cads have trained faithfully at the Manhattan gym, and are in the pink—so Billy Coe, let's go.

The only thing that seems to bother wrestling bugs in the fair ballrooms of Los Angeles is the fact that they have to tax their patience for a fortnight before they get a chance to boo, shriek and go haywire over the pretzel twisters; and when they do get that opportunity—gee how they get the steam flicker. Lou Daro, the world's greatest grappling promoter of all times, smiles complacently as he looks at his card for next Wednesday night at the Olympic Auditorium. Lou swings a double-header, Don George meeting Joe Malcewicz, and Nick Lutze clashing with Lee Wykoff. The card promises plenty of anatomy entanglement, especially at the terrific pace all matches seem to take on a particular hold that brings the bacon home when it is secured.

The wise ears of the game look upon Don George as one of the most dangerous contenders for the crown and he is sure to have a big ringside following, many of whom will only be too willing to give him a helping hand back into the arena in case he is catapulted from it by Mortar Malcewicz. Lee Wykoff is another dark horse of which great things are expected. The advance sale, as usual, is big and another whale of a house is sure to be on hand. All of the gladiators are in grand shape. This alone should insure a great night's entertainment.

At the first landing of the stairway leading up to Barney Dempsey's Manhattan gym, a placard nailed against the wall carries the legend, in big black type—"California-made palookas upstairs."

Jackie Mandell's collarbone, broken about a month ago in trying to lift a mortgage off Johnny Conde's Ford roadster, is mending fast. Jackie has jumped into the traces again at the Manhat, and will be ready in two weeks or so to give the Stadium or Olympic boys another chance to see him at his best. Last week he put in several days at Sopris's Ranch hardening his wrists by milking the famous cow, Katrina, owned by Mushy Callahan. Morrie Mandell (Jackie's brother) is in rare shape for his meeting with "Windmill" Carbinell at Morrie Cohan's Pasadena arena.

Mushy Callahan is nightly decorating the walls of the Roosevelt (Hollywood) Hotel lobby. He and Willie Bernstein frequently indulge (a la Gene Tunney) in literary discussions. Said Willie last Friday night—"That guy George Sand sure has wrote some great stuff." Sand scoffed Mushy, "why you big sashweb, that's the bimbo that rode Gallant Fox several days ago in Chicago." "Right you are, Mushy," rumbled Willie—"but don't say nothing to nobody about them mistakes I never can get right."

Joey Greenberg, who took a fast count from Referee Abe Roth, is training Armand Emanuel. Joey declares that the boxing barrister is at present in the best shape of his career. Greenberg is also rubbing his fluffy fingers over Billy Cooley, who is regarded as one of the best light-heavyweights on the Pacific Slope.

Carlo Curtis has swung into a bunch of four-round set-tos for his Saturday night cards at the Main Street Athletic Club. Carlo himself is the matchmaker and he pairs the lads with the idea in view of snappy, close and fast contests, very much like those that were brought off during the four-round programs at Jack Doyle's now extinct small arena. In the last month or so the weekly attendance has been very good, plainly showing that the game is coming back into its old-time popularity.

Paddy Quaid last Monday rushed into Billy Van's office at the Main Street Athletic Club and shouted, "What do you know about that, Billy, I counted thirty-one fighters training on the gym floor and twenty-six of them were colored!" "Sure thing you know" butted in a bystander, "and all those fighters are under the management of Thomas Cox of Pasadena." Cox, who is a White man, is a boxing enthusiast and has engaged Pop Hanlon to train his stable. Every day, as he charges finish work, Manager Cox gives each of them a brand new dollar bill. Some of the Main-street gym followers declare that Cox's stable boasts at least four very promising lads, and that they are sure to be heard from soon.

Wirt Ross, who is looked upon in Panama as one of the best in the wizard and medicine doctor, has bought the contract of "Chalky" Wright (colored) one of the most promising scrappers seen hereabouts in some time. Ross believes that this bird is a second Kid Chocolate and he has changed his name to Don Pedro Castelanes, which Paddy Quaid declares means "castile soap" in Panama Spanish. Don Pedro plays a pip of a guitar and sings many Spanish songs, so it is hinted that Wirt may pull another fast one on Tony Gallery, a fight manager. Gallery, it is said, has lost his ear for Spanish music since the Gonzales auditions, and will listen no more to the charmer, charm he never so wisely.

Speedy Dado will train at the Main Street Athletic Club for his bout with Midget Smith, which will come off at the Olympic Auditorium about the end of this month. This should be a whale of a fight card, as it is a bout in which the title is at stake.

The fast eight-meter R and six-meter sloops will, of course, figure in the spotlight during the six days of racing. Even the power cruisers will come in for their share of competition. A race around Catalina Island has been planned for the cruisers during the regatta. A gold cup will go to the winner of that event.

An interesting item in connection with the regatta came to light yesterday in the announcement that a new class called the Pacific Coast design will be introduced in the championship series. San Diego has six boats thirty feet over all in this class.

Los Angeles Harbor, of course, will have the bulk of the boats in the combined regattas. The huge fleet of racing yachts from the California Yacht Club, Los Angeles Yacht Club and Catalina Island Yacht Club are being primed now in week-end sailing tilts for the Newport classic.

All in all, everything seems to point to a gala sailing carnival which should make history for yachting on this Coast. Commodore Beek, Jim Webster, Paul Hiller and other Southern California yachting leaders are shaping the program details daily, so that all will be smooth sailing once the classic gets under way.

Sharp Winner in Auto Races

Jimmy Sharp, the boy who wins and loses with a smile, had a big day or rather a big night at the American Legion Speedway track last evening. Jimmy celebrated the opening of the night automobile racing program at the Ascot bowl by winning three of the events on the card, one of them being the forty-lap feature. Sharp also captured the Helmet dash and a ten-lap event before leaving the track for the night.

A crowd of 6000 greeted the knights of gas and oil as they rolled on the track for the opening event. Sharp's driving was the outstanding performance of a card of fine racing.

Swede Smith won a ten-lap dash as did Mel McKee.

The results:

40-lap feature won by Jimmy Sharp. Francis Quinn, second; Speed Hinckley, third. Time 20m. 22 4-5s.

Helmet dash—Won by Jimmy Sharp. Orval Brenmeyer, second; Swede Smith, third.

10-lap race—Won by Swede Smith. Francis Quinn, second; Orval Brenmeyer, third.

10-lap race—Won by Mel McKee. Speed Hinckley, second; Ted Simpson, third.

10-lap race—Won by Jimmy Sharp. Carl Ryder, second; Art Hines, third.

FEMALE SHOOTER PROVES MORE DEADLY THAN MALE

BISLEY (Eng.) July 19. (AP)—A woman who drove an army motor car during the World War, Miss Marjorie Foster, defeated many of the crack marksmen of the British Empire to win the King's prize for rifle shooting on the famous Bisley ranges today.

Not only is Miss Foster the first woman ever to achieve this feat, but she is the only member of her sex ever to place among the final 100 competitors in this event. She is the manager of a chicken farm near Bisley. Her score of 280 was a single point better than that of Lieut. A. E. Eccles of the Seaford Highlanders. Miss Foster won a cash prize of $1250 in addition to the National Rifle Association's highly coveted gold medal and gold badge.

Shooting as "Driver Foster" since, as she is a member of the British Women's Legion and the event is open only to service members, Miss Foster fired with amazing skill and nerve. At the very close of the competition she was called on to make the most difficult shot of the tournament.

Lieut. Eccles posted his total when Miss Foster had two shots to go. If she scored two "inners," shots just outside the bull's-eye that counted 4 points apiece, she would have ended in a tie with Lieut. Eccles. Using a service rifle at 1000 yards, she scored one inner, while the bulk of the crowd stood behind her in tense silence. She fired her last shot and scored a clean bull's-eye.

Miss Foster's victory was all the more amazing because of the day-to-day strain of the classic tourney. The King's prize competition is designed as a thorough test of marksmanship at many ranges and is as nerve-racking a test as any open golf tournament. The competition has been going on since Wednesday.

She thus became the third woman in a trio of Englishwomen who have made their sex famous by feats of skill and endurance this year. Miss Amy Johnson flew from England to Australia and Miss Betty Brown trounced the male opposition in winning the King's cup air race.

MUEHLEISEN IN DOUBLE VICTORY

San Diegan Takes Pair at La Jolla Laurels

Gladys Patz Also Collects Two Court Crowns

Gene Mako Surprises With Win Over Stiner

LA JOLLA, July 19.—With the exception of the mixed doubles, which was put over till tomorrow, the fourteenth annual La Jolla tennis tournament closed here today, with Dolf Muehleisen of San Diego and Gladys Patz of Los Angeles sharing honors, each winning two championships.

GLADYS PATZ.

Muehleisen conquered Elbert Lewis, Pacific Coast intercollegiate champion from U.C.L.A., in three straight, but hotly contested sets, 7-5, 6-4, 6-4. The San Diegan then paired with fellow University of California player, with whom he holds the national college doubles crown, to defeat Lewis and McArthur, 8-10, 6-4, 6-4, 2-6, 7-5, to take the doubles crown. The match lasted more than three hours, and was in doubt until the final point.

Miss Patz added another doubles to her string of victories over Elizabeth Delks to take the girls' crown, 6-4, 3-6, 6-4, and then paired with Mrs. Esther Bartosh to defeat Miss Delke and Dorothy Robinson for the doubles laurels, 6-3, 6-3.

Gene Mako also collected two championships, winning the junior boys' singles and the boys 15 and under singles. Mako has another year in the latter division and his victory over Harold Stiner in the junior was particularly impressive. The scores were 5-7, 6-4, 6-3. In the 15-and-under class he won from Jack Creamer, 6-3, 6-2.

Ruby Bishop defeated Jane Sharp in straight sets, 6-3, 6-2, to take the junior girls' championship, while Dorothy Bundy won over Miss Doeg, 6-3, 4-6, 7-5, reversing the result of the Southern California junior championships, to annex the 15-and-under title.

In the junior boys' doubles Sam Gorham and Jess Milliman defeated Mako and Boyd Georgi, 8-6, 6-4, while the Bundy-Doeg family combination teamed to defeat Miss Bishop and Ellen Lee, 6-3, 6-4.

Bobby Riggs won from Billy Barday, 7-5, 6-3, to win the boys 18-and-under crown, and Priscilla Sharp, niece fo the famous bandmaster, defeated Gena Chalmers, for the girls' title in the same division. Veterans' honors went to George Millan, who won from Dr. Holt by default, and these two teamed to win from Burdick and Shelton, 6-4, 6-4, in the veterans' doubles.

In the mixed doubles tomorrow Mrs. Bartosh and Lewis will face Dorothy Robinson and Joe Cheney. The junior mixed doubles, played today, went to Gracyn Wheeler and Leonard Patterson, who defeated Bonnie Miller and Russell Gallowa, 6-3, 6-1.

O'Doul, Klein Tied for Lead

[BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS]

Frank O'Doul and Chuck Klein of the Phillies, made the race all more interesting in the Big Six yesterday, as they drew into a tie for first place in the Big Six, and among the regulars of the National League. They both lost ground yesterday. O'Doul made two hits in eight times at bat and Klein made three in as many times, but the result put them in a deadlock with averages of .370. They are so close together that fractures must be carried out to four decimal places before they show a shade of an advantage for O'Doul.

Riggs Stephenson of Chicago clouted his way into the Big Six in third National League member by walloping out three hits in four times at bat to gain a .360 average and displace Babe Herman in the fourth place in the standing. Al Simmons made his American League honors more secure by hitting three out of five to add three points to his average. Lou Gehrig lost a point as he made one his in three official times at bat while Babe Ruth gained one with two hits in four tries.

The standing:

Cyclers Race This Morning

As a preliminary to the State meet on August 10, bicycle riders of Southern California will gather this morning at the La Cienega playground for a series of races.

The races are being sponsored by the Beverly Hills Playground Department, and Superintendent R. Hamrick reports the track in excellent condition.

Among those who will ride are George Antrobus, Neil Davidson and George Lobaugh of this city; Bob Crabtree and Hubert Mohr of Inglewood; Geary Ingham and Fernie Werthmiller of Beverly Hills, as well as a score of dark horses.

Phil Mole, American Legion League representative, and Charles A. Criffis, former racer and promoter, will be in charge of the races.

The playgrounds are located on La Cienega Boulevard one block south of Wilshire.

EDITH QUIER WINS

NEW LONDON (Ct.) July 19. (U.P.)—Miss Edith Quier of Reading, Pa., today won the Griswold trophy for the second straight year by defeating Mrs. Dorothy Campbell Hurd of Philadelphia, former American champion, 4 and 2, in the eighteen-hole final round of the women's invitational golf tournament.

"Practically all laboratories employ a single-cylinder engine, equipped with means of keeping the speed and temperature extremely constant, and with some means of recording the intensity of the knock. Some methods use simply the ear to detect the knock in an engine; others employ such devices as the 'bouncing pin,' and several types of instrumentation are occasionally used.

ONE-CYLINDER TEST

"One of the most widely used knock-testing engines has a single-cylinder engine of very high compression, whose temperature is kept constant by means of boiling water, and whose speed is controlled by a synchronous motor. Essential details are a 'bouncing pin' and 'knock-meter' to measure the knock intensity, and a double-fuel carburetor, by which it is possible to shift rapidly back and forth between the fuel to be tested and some reference fuel.

"In operating this engine it is adjusted to give a moderate knock on the chosen reference fuel, and this knock is recorded by the knock-meter. The engine is then shifted to the unknown fuel and the knock-meter shows almost instantly whether the fuel is better or worse than the reference fuel.

"Another application of the engine is the measurement of the amount of tetraethyl lead which is added to a given gasoline to make it equal in antiknock value to a given reference scale.

ROME'S TRAFFIC PROBLEM WAS WORSE THAN IN CITIES TODAY

Traffic congestion is by no means a problem of the motor age alone. Ancient Rome had a far more drastic traffic rule than any modern city has been forced to pass, according to the Erskine Bureau for Street Traffic Research, and at the height of its power was probably more congested than any city of modern Europe or America.

This early traffic rule was put into effect by Caesar, who issued an order prohibiting the passage of wagons through the central district for ten hours after sunrise. Rome also had its counterpart of the skyscraper in tenements four and five stories high. Their height was later limited by Augustus, due either to the instability of their construction or the desire to decrease congestion by persuading people to move outward from the center of the city.

Superintendent Biscailuz will speak before the local brake testers at a banquet at the Elks' Club, the 24th inst.

TRIP TO LAKE OFERS APPEAL

is nearly finished on an additional two miles which will bring the road to a junction with another piece of newly constructed pavement a mile and a quarter in length with its termination at the village of Lake Arrowhead. The new highway encompasses more than ten of the sixteen miles of mountain road, eliminating in that area all the stiff grades and the scores of switchbacks which have been a thorn in the side of motorists for so many years. Plans are now being laid for extension of the new highway from Camp Waterman to the foot of the mountain, a distance of approximately five miles.

The State will have expended more than $1,000,000 on this nine miles of highway to Lake Arrowhead when it is completed. The new pavement now in use was constructed at an approximate cost of $600,000, officials announced, while that now nearing completion will cost in the neighborhood of $400,000 more.

Tied in with the new construction on Foothill Boulevard in Los Angeles and San Bernardino counties, the new highway brings Lake Arrowhead within an easy two-and-a-half-hour drive of Los Angeles.

The entire length of Foothill Boulevard in San Bernardino county has been widened from eighteen to thirty feet and has been resurfaced with asphaltic concrete in the last two years. An additional improvement in the form of a grade separation already has been begun by the Pacific Electric Railway at Muscat.

In Los Angeles county during the last two years more than $500,000 has been spent on Foothill Boulevard in widening and resurfacing and in the elimination of turns and curves. Included in this work is one piece five and a half miles in length extending from the east city limits of Glendora to the west city limits of Claremont. This work cost $343,557.27 exclusive of engineering and inspection costs. Another completed project on this highway is a section of a mile and a quarter in length between San Dimas and Ramona avenues near Glendora while work is now under way on another mile from Azusa to Glendora.

The bridge over the San Gabriel River three miles from Azusa also is being widened to eliminate a bottleneck which has materially slowed up traffic in the past. A check last year revealed that an average of 14,000 automobiles a day used this span which was but twenty-one feet in width. The bridge is being doubled in width of roadway with a five-foot walk along one side. Officials said that the work will be completed by August 1. The cost of the project is in the neighborhood of $90,000.

Evidence of the fact that the motoring public is quick to appreciate the benefits of the new mountain highway is indicated by officials of the Lake Arrowhead company who announced last week that a decided gain in the number of visitors to the mile-high resort district has been noted this year.

Because of the fact that the new highway is bringing such large numbers to Arrowhead, many innovations have been added there for the entertainment of visitors. Dinner-dances at the Lodge and the Tavern are features and dancing is in order every evening except Mondays at the Casino. Orchestra concerts are given afternoons in the patio at the village and orchestra and vocal serenades on the lake are proving a popular addition to the entertainment program.

The golf course and bridle paths through the forests are attracting larger numbers than ever before, officials said. Fishing, motor boating, swimming and Tom Thumb golf are among the other attractions at the lake.

Harbor Boulevard is still under construction between Carson and Weston streets, states the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

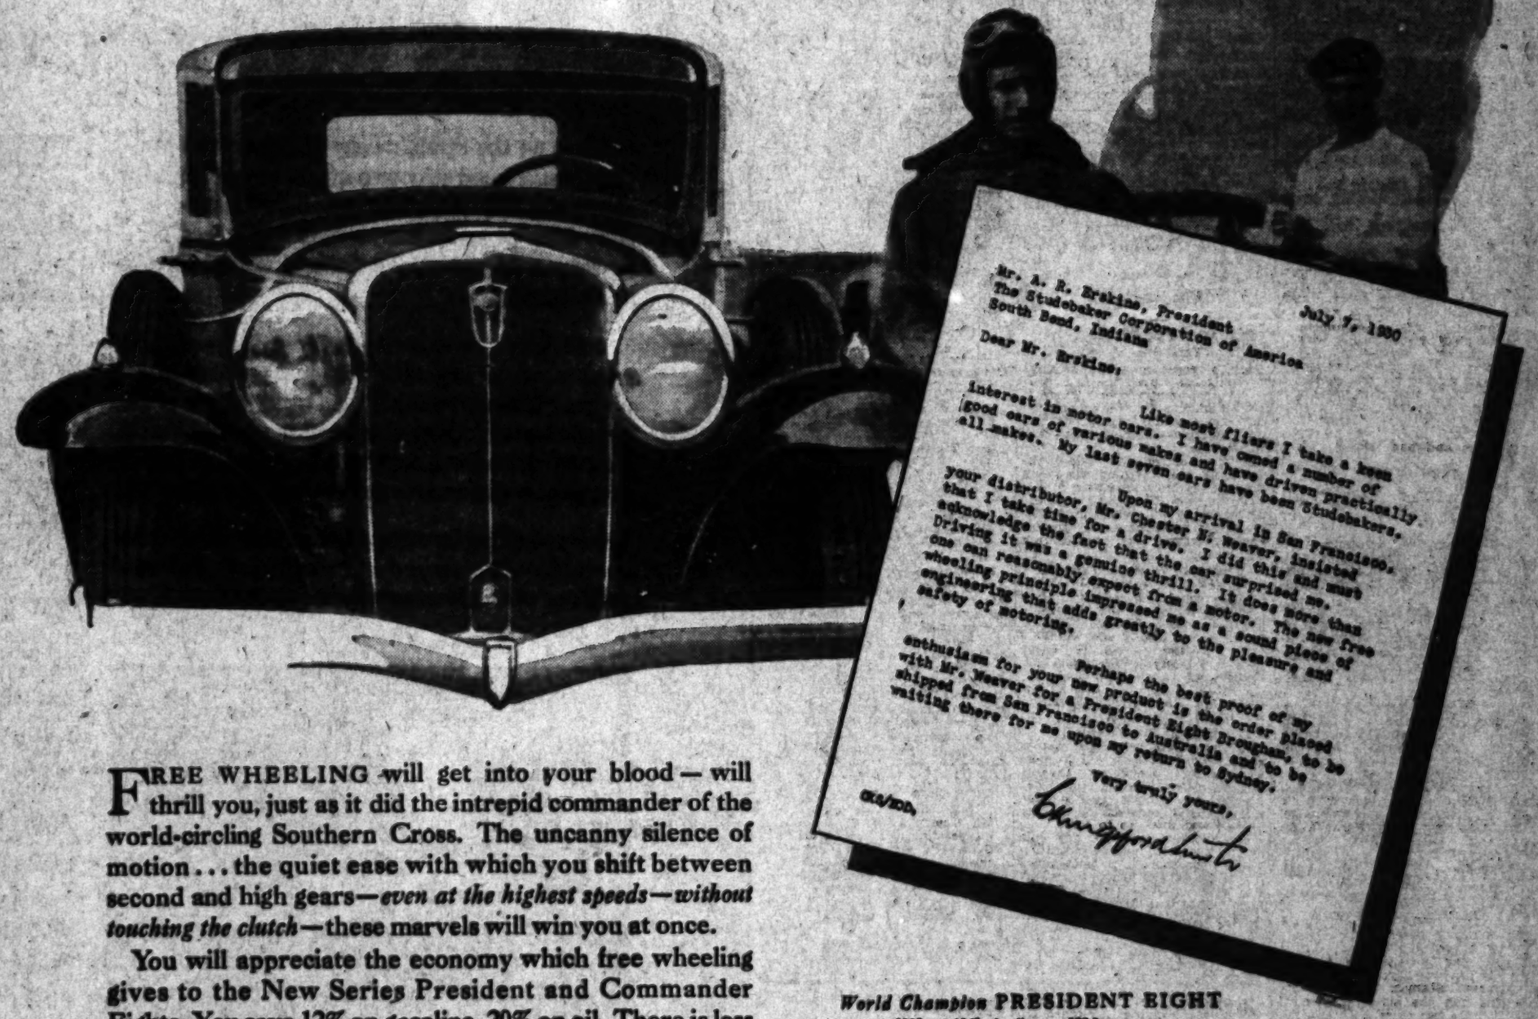
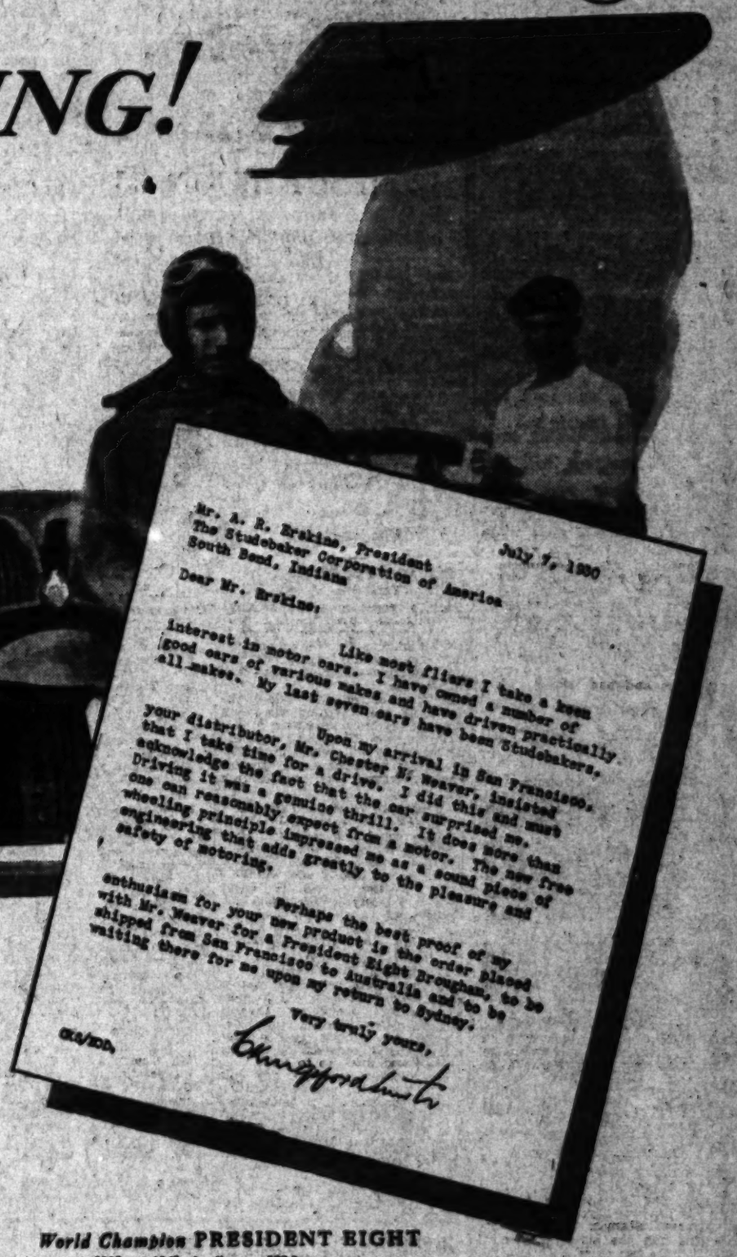
Lt.-Col. Kingsford-Smith finds "a new thrill in motoring" -FREE WHEELING!

(MANUFACTURED UNDER STUDEBAKER PATENTS)





Mr. A. R. Erskine, President July 7, 1930
The Studebaker Corporation of America
South Bend, Indiana

Dear Mr. Erskine:

Like most fliers I take a keen interest in motor cars. I have owned a number of good cars of various makes and have driven practically all makes. My last seven cars have been Studebakers.

Upon my arrival in San Francisco, your distributor, Mr. Chester H. Weaver, insisted that I take time for a drive. I did this and must acknowledge the fact that the car surprised me. Driving it was a genuine thrill. It does more than one can reasonably expect from a motor. The new free wheeling principle impressed me as a sound piece of engineering that adds greatly to the pleasure and safety of motoring.

Perhaps the best proof of my enthusiasm for your new product is the order placed with Mr. Weaver for a President Eight Brougham, to be shipped from San Francisco to Australia and to be waiting there for me upon my return to Sydney.

Very truly yours,

Kingsford-Smith

FREE WHEELING will get into your blood — will thrill you, just as it did the intrepid commander of the world-circling Southern Cross. The uncanny silence of motion . . . the quiet ease with which you shift between second and high gears—even at the highest speeds—without touching the clutch—these marvels will win you at once.

You will appreciate the economy which free wheeling gives to the New Series President and Commander Eights. You save 12% on gasoline, 20% on oil. There is less carbonizing of motor, less tire wear, less chassis strain, plus new factors of safety.

But come, experience for yourself the extraordinary thrill of free wheeling—this new and exclusive Studebaker feature—in cars of breath-taking beauty!

LONG RANGE FOR TANDEM PLANE

Bellanca Has Two Propellers, Pushing and Pulling

Chicago 'Daily News' Testing Unusual Craft

Flying Range With Capacity Load 7000 Miles

Reports received here from aeronautical experts seeing the Chicago Daily News tandem-engined Bellanca airplane, the Blue Streak, for the first time say they are amazed by its specifications and flying potentialities. The giant plane has just been brought to Curtiss Field, north of Chicago, from the Bellanca Aircraft Company's factory at New Castle, Del., for its first major test flight. The pilot, Shirley J. Short, who was given the Harmon Trophy in 1927 as the world's most valuable pilot during 1926, when he was flying the night air mail between Chicago and Cleveland, expects unusual performance from the Blue Streak.

The Blue Streak is known in the Bellanca factory as the Tandem because of its peculiar engine mounting. In the nose of the giant airplane are two Curtiss Conqueror water-cooled gasoline engines, specially built, which at 2450 maximum flying revolutions per minute deliver a total of 1398.9 horsepower. The engines are set back to back, the forward engine driving a thirteen-foot two-bladed wooden propeller, the rear engine driving a three-bladed metal propeller, nine feet in diameter. It is both a pusher and a puller for the rear propeller is mounted on a shaft running through the short cabin of the airplane.

"Why cannot such engines be made accessible in flight?" it was asked. "If assistant pilots or mechanics could get at feed pipes, water connections and so on, make repairs to engines while in the air, safety would be greatly increased."

"I have such an airplane in mind," the calm-voiced Bellanca answered. The result is the Blue Streak.

Following are a few of the specifications and known performances of the Blue Streak, which is a sesquiplane or a plane and a half:

Wing spread of main monoplane wings, 83.2 feet.

Total wing area, 912 square feet.

Overall length, forty-seven feet, three inches.

Overall height, thirteen feet.

Fuselage or cabin lenghth, twenty-five feet.

Fuselage height, ten feet, four inches.

Crew, four men: Pilot, copilot, mechanic and radio operator, who is also assistant navigator.

Chord or width of main wings, nine feet.

Span of horizontal tail plane, twenty-five feet, seven inches.

Weight empty, 8000 pounds.

Speed on both motors, full throttle, 160 miles per hour.

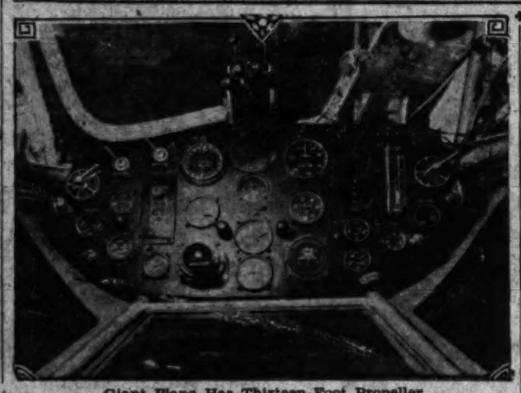
Speed of both motors, two-thirds throttle, 132.5 miles per hour.

Gasoline capacity, 2150 gallons.

Speed on rear engine, alone, full throttle, 114 miles per hour.

Speed of forward engine, alone, full throttle, 116 miles per hour.

Tandem Engined Bellanca Sesqui-Plane—The Blue Streak



Giant Plane Has Thirteen-Foot Propeller

Two views of the Chicago Daily News ship reveal the 83-foot, 5-inch wing spread and the peculiar shape of the fuselage. Below, the instrument board of the Blue Streak. The board is equipped with the latest improved instruments required for all sorts of flying and navigating conditions, including earth inductor compass for direct navigation, and instruments for flying through the dark or in fog or blinding storms.

First Glider Gets Approval of Department

The first glider to fulfill the airworthiness requirements of the aeronautics branch of the Department of Commerce has been issued a certificate of approval, Gilbert G. Budwig, director of air regulation, announced today.

"This approval, which is issued in the form of an approved-type certificate," Mr. Budwig stated, "denotes that this glider has been carefully examined and tested for its design, materials, workmanship and flight characteristics by engineers and inspectors of the department. Other gliders manufactured exactly similar to the approved design will be eligible for Department of Commerce license.

"While there are approximately 400 gliders which have been issued identification numbers by the aeronautics branch, the glider which has been approved will represent the first type eligible for license under an approved-type certificate. Gliders which are identified only, are not examined by the department as to airworthiness.

REMEMBER "MIGHTY MICHIGAN?"

Adria, Black Crow, Vogue, Glide—All These Were Once the Proud Name on One of 640 Automobiles Introduced of Which But Forty-five Makes are Now Remaining

Since the birth of the American automobile industry thirty-five years ago exactly 640 different makes of passenger cars have been presented to the public.

This was accomplished by the introduction of from one to fifty-one new cars in the United States each year except one. The exception was the year 1897.

Also, today there are but forty-five standard makes of passenger cars, accounting for an annual production which has averaged nearly 4,000,000 units for the past several years.

These are a few of the interesting facts in connection with the history and present development of the nation's greatest industry which are brought to light in a digging expedition conducted through the voluminous files and records of the automotive division of the United States Department of Commerce.

HEAVY MORTALITY

Of the 186 makes of passenger cars introduced prior to 1905, only eleven are in existence today. Between that year and 1910, inclusive, 129 other makes were introduced, of which five remain today. From the end of 1910 to the end of 1920, another 187 makes were manufactured, and of these eleven still are available to the motor-car purchasing public. During the next ten years, research discloses, only seventy-seven cars appeared, but eighteen of them still are in demand.

Records reveal the popularity, in their day, of cars bearing the names of Adria, Anchor, Car Nation, U. S. Long Distance and the Vogue. Mr. Childs questions how many car owners today remember these machines, but adds that "each one of these cars was placed on the American market."

FORGOTTEN NAMES

A study of the roll call of American automobiles reveals the efforts at automotive nomenclature which were made by early American manufacturers to attract popular interest. Natural history was represented by the Badger, the Beaver, the Black Crow, the Buffalo, the Crow, the Eagle, the Falcon, the Fox, the Lion, the Wolf and the Petrel.

Following is a table, prepared especially by the automotive division, which shows at a glance the number of makes introduced each year from 1895 to 1929:

Year	Makes Intro.	Year	Makes Intro.
1895	3	1913	13
1896	1	1914	10
1897	0	1915	11
1898	6	1916	34
1899	9	1917	22
1900	12	1918	20
1901	47	1919	13
1902	23	1920	10
1903	51	1921	28
1904	25	1922	7
1905	22	1923	1
1906	17	1924	7
1907	21	1925	1
1908	16	1926	1
1909	16	1927	3
1910	32	1928	3
		1929	8

Names like the Climber, the Glide, the Meteor, the Perfection and the Mighty Michigan indicate attempts to impress the public with the operating characteristics of those cars. Then there were the Sphinx and the Hazard. History and geography evidently influenced the naming of the Marathon, the Mecca and the Peru, while mythology undoubtedly inspired the christening of the Centaur. Other makes now nearly or entirely forgotten were Everybody's, the Storck, the Krit, the Alpena and the Nance.

Most of the cars introduced in the early years of the industry have passed into history, but several companies, which pioneered in the automotive trade of those days, still are in active existence. Others have lost their identity through amalgamation.

Without the experience gained by those repeated attempts to capture the public automotive demand, there could not have been the vast total of more than 29,000,000 passenger cars which are registered today throughout the world. Nor could Americans alone be operating today more than 23,000,000 passenger cars instead of the relatively few thousands which were on the streets at the beginning of the century.

WARNER, one of the foremost figures in the automotive accessory field, presents RADORITE—a guaranteed cure for clogged radiators and impaired cooling systems.

WARNER RADORITE treats the metal, NOT the water, because the ever changing source of supply makes it futile to treat water.

Warner RADORITE removes dirt and corrosion from the radiator—just like you wash dirt from your hands. Then it sets up a protecting film over the entire interior surface of the cooling system to make further accumulations impossible. It IS a wonder worker.

An absolute necessity for every car, especially new cars. Easy to use, merely pour in radiator as per directions on can to ensure a free circulating cooling system.

The Pasadena Chess Club is planning a midsummer tourney. Dr. A. A. Michelson, famed Chicago scientist, is with them again at the Maryland Hotel and playing much in the daytime as well as at the club's regular Monday and Friday night meetings.

Chess clubs all over the country celebrated the anniversary of the birth (June 22, 1837) of Paul Morphy, first American world's champion. Today his games still form a most entertaining part of chess literature. All of his brilliancies have been published so many times there is nothing new to offer. The following is an off-hand affair played during the First American Chess Congress, the major tourney of which was won by the 20-year-old Morphy.

WONDERFUL VOLUNTEER, 301951

P. S. 6245-H. C., Senior Herd Sire of La Lomita Ranchos

The founding of the exceptional La Lomita herd of Jersey cattle has required a great amount of money as well as years of care and study in breeding and selection. Our endeavors have been and are directed towards one great end, namely, to make the Jersey cow the outstanding one in the State for both beauty and heavy production. La Lomita Jerseys have those two most desirable qualities, ability to fill the milk pail and to please the eye.

Infinite care has been taken in the choice and purchase of our individual animals. The result is a beautiful, healthy herd which comprises numerous gold and silver medal cows. The blood lines of nearly every prominent family of the Jersey bulls imported into this country are represented in the La Lomita herd. It is no wonder, therefore, that La Lomita Jerseys have for years been prominently in the foreground in all of those things which lead to the consistent improvement of the breed.

Just now we have some splendidly bred young bulls and heifers which we offer at prices that Pacific Coast Jersey breeders can afford to pay. Any of these young animals will make a very valuable addition to any herd. We invite correspondence.

COMMENT AND OPINION

Farm and Garden

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of agricultural production are gladly received. Address all letters to editorial department, Farm and Garden Magazine.

A Changing Industry

NO INDUSTRY stands still through the procession of years. Times and conditions change and business must change with them. The industry, embracing many branches—growing feed, breeding cattle, production and handling of milk, making and marketing cream, butter, cheese, cottage cheese, ice cream, dried and condensed milk, by-products, testing, inspecting and a multitude more—has altered much and today is emerging from its chrysalis into something very different from what it was forty, thirty, twenty, even ten years ago.

Once it was composed of countless dairymen and breeders, with little creameries and cheese factories springing up here and there. The past was somewhat chaotic but order has appeared, and whether we like it or not, it is inevitable.

From the consumer's standpoint, it is good, for while prices have advanced so have all prices, and the gain in cleanliness and convenience is hardly to be measured. Today milk is not just a great food—it always was that—but an absolutely safe food.

A few years ago the industry didn't seem able to "get together." The dairymen were loath to give up their independence for the sake of the advantages of co-operation. The co-operatives that were formed were not always handled properly nor were they proof against the somewhat insidious assaults from the outside. In some localities small groups, generally made up of Danes, Swiss or other European people, succeeded because they had learned how in their home lands. California, home of American co-operation, however, formed some of the earliest dairy groups and gradually these united into an association of great power and significance.

Large private institutions have been coalescing. Tremendous consolidation and expansion have taken place. For example, the great Borden organization recently completed negotiations for the acquisition of seven other concerns, one a dairy company in Canada, another an ice cream concern in New Jersey, a dairy products company in Ohio and another in Illinois. The directors of the National Dairy Products Company have voted to acquire the Kraft-Phenix Cheese Corporation. The Golden State, a Coast organization, has intrenched itself firmly in California. Western Dairy Products Company is reported to have absorbed a number of chain stores.

And all these have specialized to a considerable degree. While we think of Borden's as a condensed milk company, along with Carnation, we learn with some surprise that in the East, where it is strongest, it is the great sweet milk distributor. Golden State evolved the latest process for drying milk, and is also probably the largest butter-exporting concern in America.

In the meantime what is the outlook for the dairyman himself—the fellow who milks the cows? Will he be forced to join some of these huge amalgamations in order to live?

There isn't any doubt about it, he'll have to readjust himself to the situation as it is. Some smaller organizations, such as the Natural Milk group, marketing whole sweet milk unpasteurized and under highly sanitary conditions, are putting up a valiant fight for existence and should endure. The large certified dairies also find a particular market of their own well worth holding and developing. The largest of these has even entered other fields, such as the production of ice cream. Adohr is an example. Others produce a very high quality of milk and make little effort to market, disposing of the product through established companies, like P. R. Bain's Jersey establishment at Palms. Still others have built up local markets which good products and acquaintanceship maintain. Another is the institutional outlet, where a market is already provided. The Los Angeles County Farm, the Pottenger Sanitarium and other public or institutional establishments maintain fine herds of dairy cattle and find it pays better than to buy milk and milk products. Today we find more scientific study and more knowledge of the dairy subject, from feeding cows to feeding babies milk, than ever before. Bovine disease eradication programs have made great strides. Marketing has passed into the hands of specialists. Cleanliness is the rule and not the exception.

However, it is still an agricultural enterprise, dairying, the largest in California, but an industrial affair also. It is of vital importance and interest to everybody—man and woman, the aged and the children, city man and farmer, laborer and capitalist, chemist and physician.

Most of all, the mothers of growing children find in milk and in everything that pertains to milk an absorbing topic, and they should (and most of them do) grasp eagerly every opportunity to learn all about it.

Dairying has always been a great undertaking. It is greater today than ever. It is better organized than ever and can be classified along with steel, movies, automobiles and the like as "big business." It merits every attention, both for its excellence and for its weak spots.

Our Dairy Number

IN THIS special dairy number of Farm and Garden Magazine, we have endeavored to cover the entire industry as adequately as possible. The men who have written the articles therein are prominent in the dairy world. Each one was chosen because of his special knowledge of some particular phase of the business, and all of them have recognized the importance of such an issue and have contributed willingly because of it.

It is a big subject and this number isn't complete, for there are limits to the size of this magazine. Some subjects have been omitted because there was no room for them or because they have been discussed before or will be taken up later.

We have illustrated it as extensively as possible, but for every picture we have used, we have scores almost as good. However, we have hopes of another issue, larger, better, more complete. We call attention to the "Who's Who" printed on page three, which tells who our contributors are, and, we earnestly hope, without a single error in initial or titles. It has been quite a chore, gathering the materials, but one that brought pleasure as well as gray hair and headaches, because it is, we flatter ourselves, not an unworthy presentation of a great industry and one that belongs in the very front rank of California's great enterprises.

The Cow Census

COUNTING NOSES IN STATE DAIRY HERDS

By Howard A. Miller

ONE is indeed timorous to venture forth on a discussion of population at this time, when the census returns are causing many to revise their boasts. However, this article is not a discussion of future prospects, nor does it have to do with the human race, and finally, but not least important, as far as the safety and integrity of the author are concerned, the responsibility for the "population" figures used herein is passed to other shoulders.

The writer is, nevertheless, inclined to put a good deal of faith in his sources, which are none other than E. E. Kaufman, agricultural statistician, and George A. Scott, live-stock statistician for the Federal-State Co-operative Crop Reporting Service. They do not claim for their figures that they are anything more than estimates, but these estimates were worked out after a great deal of study, and without any desire other than to arrive as near the truth as possible. Their effort has been to get the facts for the benefit of the dairy industry, for in this day and age it is necessary that a business know in considerable detail the numerical factors which enter into its operations.

California is considered by people who live without its borders as a land of specialized industries. And so it is, but another fact not ordinarily known to those without and to many within our State, is that the dairy industry is California's most important business. The dairy cow, be she a Guernsey, or a Holstein, is found throughout the length and breadth of the State. The dairy cow, in our census, is any 'milk cow 2 years old or over," and Table I, accompanying this article, gives the figures county by county, as of January 1, 1930. Table II shows the "population," by districts, of the State since 1925.

At first glance we observe that the total for the State has increased from 578,000 to 626,000 during the 5-year period. This 47,000 increase would not appear to be striking in a State noted for its remarkable development in all lines. It is only about 8 per cent increase. However, it has come at a time when there has been a still larger increase in the production per cow. G. E. Gordon, dairy extension specialist of the University of California, estimates that last year the average production per cow for California was approximately 239 pounds, as compared with about 213 pounds five years ago. This increase of twenty-six pounds per cow, or 12 per cent on top of the 8 per cent increase in numbers, has meant that the milk fat production in the State of California during the past five years has increased about 20 per cent.

Growth by Districts

It is of interest to note the situation with respect to the different districts. Starting on the north, we find that the north coast and mountain counties have just about held their own in number of cows. The central coast area has shown only a small increase—likewise Sacramento Valley, but when we reach San Joaquin Valley, we find that that greatest of dairy producing areas in the State has not only maintained its pre-eminence, but has increased its lead. It has a 15 per cent greater number of cows, as compared with the 8 per cent advance for the State as a whole. The counties along the Sierra Nevada represent the only districts falling off in dairy cow population. Southern California has shown approximately the same rate of gain as the State as a whole.

An analysis of the reasons for these trends in dairy population and production should first consider the markets for the products of the different areas. Dairying, as a world-wide industry, produces butter, cheese, and other manufactured commodities capable of long-time storage and long-distance transportation, and so these commodities enter into international trade, with the result that the price level is in no small measure governed by the world supply and demand, after taking into consideration tariff barriers.

But while the great bulk of the dairy production of the world is concerned with manufactured products, a lesser volume of milk fat is handled, in direct contrast, as our most perishable food commodity. As the greatest necessity in human diet, fresh milk must be produced within a comparatively short distance of the point of consumption, and so a complex situation prevails in this industry, with price factors governed by world situations on the one hand, and purely local conditions on the other.

California has been growing in human population, and its per capita consumption of milk has also been on the increase. There has been the need of increased production of sweet milk supplying our metropolitan areas. One need look no further for the reason for much of the increase in the dairy-cow population in California during the past few years. Southern California's increased number of humans has resulted in an increased market milk supply throughout its area and extending into the San Joaquin Valley. The northern bay district has likewise reached further and further out for its milk and cream requirements. The result has been that not only has our cow population increased, but a greater percentage of the total production has gone into market milk, cream, and ice cream uses, and a lesser percentage to the nonperishable manufactured products.

The Biggest of 'Em All!

California's Dairy Industry Is Its Most Important Agricultural Enterprise and It's Not Overdone Yet

By G. E. Gordon

A Southern California dairy—a picture of the comfort, thrift and competence which, under proper management, the dairy cow brings to her owner.

THE California dairy industry is the most important agricultural business in the State in point of dollars returned to the producers annually. California, however, produces only about 3½ per cent of the total dairy products produced in the United States. This means that California production is not of great importance in the total volume of dairy products in the county as a whole. Consideration of the industry in California must of necessity take into account the production of dairy products in other States and in countries throughout the world. California does not produce all of the dairy products consumed in the State, but that may or may not mean that there should be an increase in total volume of production. The industry in California is undergoing a change at the present time. On account of the increasing population in the large cities, a larger percentage of California production is being consumed in the form of market milk. Due to this fact, and also due to improved methods of handling and refrigeration and to increased facilities for transportation, some sections of the State formerly interested in butter and cheese alone are now interested in market milk or sweet cream. Mountain valleys and outlying districts of the State are mainly concerned in production for butter manufacture at the present time. The Rocky Mountain States have taken advantage of the California situation to increase their production of butter.

The United States, as a whole, has been on an importing basis for several years up to 1929. With modern methods of refrigeration and transportation, all manufactured dairy products are world products and can be shipped throughout the world in good condition. This situation indicates the very definite relationship between prices for dairy products in the United States and the prices of these products on world markets.

Two Reasons

Dairy production in the United States has been increasing in the past few years more rapidly than has human population. The United States, however, has remained on an import basis in dairy products up to 1929 and the reason for this has been the increased per capita consumption of these products. There are two reasons for this. One is the educational work that has been carried on to show the nutritive value of dairy products, and the other has been the improved quality of the products themselves. The importance of producing high quality products cannot be overemphasized as a help in maintaining a satisfactory market. A study of the world situation indicates very clearly that prices are very directly controlled by the world's supply and demand. If dairymen wish to increase their profits they should do so by reducing the cost of production through greater efficiency, rather than to hope for increased profits through higher prices.

There are four factors that affect the dairyman's income: (1) The volume of production per unit, or pounds of butter fat per cow per year; (2) the cost of production per unit, or the cost of producing one pound of butter fat; (3) quality of the product; (4) efficiency in marketing. All of these factors are essenial to a satisfactory income. There is a great opportunity for dairymen to lower their cost of production by increasing the average production of their cows. Volume of production and cost of production are so closely related that one can not be considered without automatically taking the other into consideration. The higher the production per cow the lower will be the cost of production, other things being equal. It is, therefore, necessary for dairymen to consider ways and means of increasing the average production of their herds.

Fortunately for them, there are certain known fundamental factors pertaining to dairy production upon which satisfactory improvement is based. These factors include breeding, feeding and weeding. These factors can not be satisfactorily controlled, however, without a definite knowledge of production. In order to breed constructively, feed economically and weed wisely, the production of each animal must be known. It is interesting to note that there are two classes of live stock which have made greater progress than others. These are dairy cattle and race horses, and this progress has been made possible through a definite knowledge of results secured. These results are production of milk in the dairy cow and production of feed in the race horse. Through these definitely known results it has been possible to carry on breeding practices much more efficiently.

Cow-testing work has been and is being stressed in California by the agricultural extenion service of the University of California, because it provides the knowledge which is the foundation upon which all of these fundamental factors rest. It is impossible to accurately determine the production of a cow by observation alone. Her milk must be weighed and tested. Cows do not all require the same amount of feed. By feeding according to individual production and quality, it is possible to increase the actual production of many individuals and to save considerable amounts of feed. Not all cows of dairy breeding will make satisfactory producers, and even those that are satisfactory producers reach a period when they cease to be profitable. So it is necessary to keep production records continuously in order to determine the proper time at which to cull out unprofitable cows. Dairymen should also watch the health of their herds. The healthy herd is much more efficient in production than is one with disease. The consuming public is becoming more and more particular about the products it consumes, and if the producer is to fulfill their demand he must produce what the consumer desires.

When the agricultural extension service of the University of California was organizing its dairy improvement program a few years ago, it was found that the average California cow in 1920 was producing 183 pounds of butter fat per year. It was felt that this average could be increased to 265 pounds per cow per year. Many herds are already able to exceed this amount, but this increase in average production would mean an increase of 45 per cent in the production of all cows in the State.

It is interesting to note what progress has been made during the past few years. As stated above, the average production per cow in 1920 was 183 pounds of butter fat per year. This has been increased in 1929 to 237.3 pounds per cow, an increase of 54.3 pounds, or 29.7 per cent. There were 626,000 dairy cows in California in 1929. With this increase of 54.3 pounds of butter fat per cow for the 626,000 cows, there was a total increase in the State of 33,991,800 pounds of butter fat for 1929, due alone to the increase in the average production per cow over that of 1920. Between 1900 and 1920 there was an average increase of six-tenths of a pound of butter fat per cow per year. During the period 1920 to 1929, there was an average increase of six pounds per cow per year, or ten times as much increase per year during the last nine years as during the preceding twenty years. This increase in average production per cow during this last nine-year period has resulted in a total increase of 181,641,800 pounds of butter fat, due to the increased average production per cow, and this has given a total increased return to the dairy farmers at farm price during this period of $102,952,497.

While this increase is very gratifying, it is hoped that the average production can be increased as steadily in the future as it has been in the past, as it will result in a more efficient and profitable dairy industry in California.

The Vital Item

The feeding of California's dairy cows is the most important item of expense in connection with this important industry. Detailed cost studies have been carried on in many California counties located in all sections of the State. These studies have indicated a range between $36.37 per cow per year for feed, and an annual cost of $273.32. Probably a fair average feed cost would amount to more than $100 per cow per year. With 626,000 cows reported in the State, this would indicate a total feed cost of at least $62,600,000 each year.

Because of this large item it is well worth while to consider ways and means of using this feed more effectively. Probably one of the biggest wastes is the use of good feed for poor cows. It is impossible to feed cows of low producing ability efficiently and economically. There are also many cows in the State of high-producing ability that are not being fed economically. Effective and economical feeding means liberal feeding. The first feed given dairy cows is used for maintenance only and gives no return. Only that part above maintained requirements can be used for milk production, and so the greater the amount of feed a good cow can consume the more efficient will be her use of that feed. In some sections of the State, dairy cows are being overfed, but in most sections they are not being fed as much as they can use efficiently. The only satisfactory way of feeding economically, particularly with concentrates, is to feed strictly according to production. This, of course, requires a knowledge of the amount of milk and butter fat each cow is producing.

Dairying is one of the oldest and best-known of agricultural industries, and so, much work has been done on dairy cattle feeding. There is a great deal of information on the subject, which makes it possible to feed quite accurately according to the cow's needs. It might be worth while to consider just what the requirements of a satisfactory dairy ration are. These may be listed as follows: Palatability, succulence, variety, bulkiness, balance and economy.

The Cow Census

COUNTING NOSES IN STATE DAIRY HERDS

By Howard A. Miller

NE is indeed timorous to venture forth on a discussion of population at this time, when the census returns are coming many to revise their boasts. However, this article is not a discussion of figures primarily, nor does it have

Gordon, dairy extension specialist of the University of California, estimates that last year the average production per cow for California was approximately 325 pounds, as compared with about 313 pounds five years

The Poultry Yard

Counting the Costs

Results of Poultry Study Given by State College

By Paul S. Williamson
Agricultural Extension Service

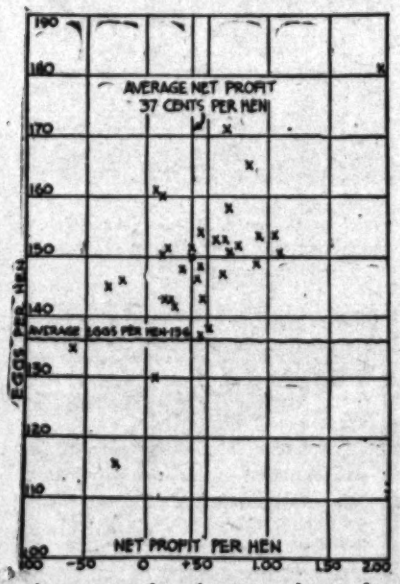
When careful records are kept on almost three-quarters of a million hens in eighteen California counties, the result ought to give a pretty fair idea of the costs and profits involved in the poultry business.

These results, reported by Fluharty and Wilcox in a thick bulletin entitled "Enterprise Efficiency Studies on California Farms," show the average net profit per hen to be 37 cents a year. This, at first thought, seems pretty gloomy, but a closer examination shows some bright spots. By net profit, they mean that this sum of 37 cents per bird is left after all the cash expenses, an allowance for family labor, depreciation on the buildings and equipment, and interest on the investment at 6 per cent, have been deducted.

On the accompanying graph the results of each one of the thirty-six county summaries are plotted to show the relation between the eggs per hen and the net profit. The highest dot on the page is for Fresno county. The three poultry ranches in the 1925 study in this county had an average egg production of 181 eggs per hen in that year, and an average net profit of $1.95 per hen. However, only 898 hens were included in the study.

In 1927 the same county had five poultrymen in the study, who averaged 171 eggs per hen, but with a net profit of only 64 cents per hen.

The counties with the large number of birds had the low averages, as might be expected. Sonoma county, in 1927, had 119,198 birds in the study, with an average production of 130 eggs and a net profit of 6 cents per bird. In 1928 the same county had 130,277 birds in the study, with an average production of 137.4 eggs and a net profit of 42 cents per hen. It is principally due to these large studies that the average production was as low as 136 eggs and the net profit 37 cents.



Average number of eggs per hen, and average net profit per hen, in California study of efficiency on the poultry farm, as graphed by Fluharty and Wilcox. Read the accompanying article by Paul S. Williamson.

Los Angeles county had 43,974 birds in the study in 1928, with an average profit of 153.5 eggs and a net profit of $1.02 per bird.

There is a very definite tendency, as the graph shows, for the profit to increase as the production increases. This bears out the statement that the most important thing a poultryman can do is to try, in every way possible, to increase his production per hen. The total cost for the 705,495 birds on which reports were made averaged $3.90, and the income was $4.27 per bird.

The bulletin from which this information was obtained can be secured from any farm adviser or from the college of agriculture at Berkeley.

Californians now. Otto Brett, German, and Mrs. Brett, Italian, went "back home" after amassing the "wherewith" in Illinois only to discover they didn't like the "old country" so well after all. Here they are egg-gathering on their Fontana poultry farm.

He Sells 'Em Now

FONTANA.—For many years Mr. and Mrs. Otto Brett of Fontana used eggs plentifully in a successful bakery in Illinois. Consequently, they were accustomed to the handling of hen fruit from the consumer's angle when they decided to go into egg production in this community.

Both of the Bretts were born abroad, he in Germany and she in Italy. During the long years when they were making their fortune with a bakery and confectionery business across the river from St. Louis in Illinois, they promised themselves that when the time came to retire they would go back to the "old country." When that time came, they did go back, but not for long. He did not like Germany as well as he had expected to; she discovered that Italy had somehow changed. A few months later, they were back in America, en route to California.

At Fontana, the Bretts have a poultry flock of 2200 laying Leghorns. They are busy folk, needless to say, but they like the life and they say they would much rather be egg farmers than egg consumers on a grand scale, as they once were.

"Fine Feathers" Pay

Arizona Finds Profit in Raising Gorgeous Peafowl

PHOENIX.—New ways of making a five-acre tract of land yield an income to those living upon it are being discovered in the Salt River Valley almost every day. For instance there is O. A. Jones, living south of Phoenix, who has found out that he can secure a good income from his land by raising peacocks. Besides these birds, Mr. Jones is devoting some attention to raising ring-neck or Chinese pheasants, Silver pheasants and a few turkeys. Recently he had sixty-eight peacocks on hand, of which thirteen have since been shipped to New York City, where a large commercial house had purchased them for advertising purposes. His flock this fall promises to number more than 100 birds.

The breed which engages Mr. Jones's attention is commonly known as the blue peafowl, a bird of gorgeous plumage that is native to India and Indo-China, where it is a wild game fowl. The birds have been found to thrive exceptionally well in the climate of the Salt River Valley, Mr. Jones says. He made a careful study of their habits before venturing into the business of raising them for market.

He found that they required practically the same care as other wild game fowl in captivity, but that they were more easily domesticated. Some of his peafowl have become regular pets of the family. It is three years before the birds reach maturity, Mr. Jones says, and until the third year the male and female are quite similar in appearance. It is during the third year that the beautiful plumage of the male appears, and then he begins to "strut his stuff."

At molting time he loses the rainbow-colored feathers of the tail and instead of being "proud as a peacock," he is exactly the reverse. The strutter ordinarily goes into seclusion as far as possible and tries to hide in shame until his beautiful tail feathers have grown again. On the Jones ranch this is not possible, so the male, after hanging in the corners for a while, overcomes his modesty and rejoins the rest of the flock.

Spreads of ten and eleven feet for the tail feathers are not unusual among the male birds which Mr. Jones has raised. Shipping birds with such ornaments is considerable of a problem, he has found. Because of the danger of damaging the plumage, specially constructed crates are used. Each bird has a separate crate. Its tail is wrapped in burlap, and then the long V-shaped end of the crate, protecting the tail is also wrapped. In this position the peacock must remain during its journey. The recent shipment to New York went through without damage to any of the birds. Watching such packages presented a problem to the express company.

Mr. Jones uses turkeys for setting peafowl eggs. The hen breeds but once a year, laying eight or nine eggs, which require four weeks to hatch. He raises the baby chicks "by hand," taking them from the hens as soon as hatched. The bird has been recognized as a food delicacy for ages. The mature fowl will weigh approximately twelve pounds and most of the meat is found on the breast, Mr. Jones says. So far he has had no trouble in disposing of all he has wished to sell at prices showing a fine profit over the raising costs.

Milk for Poultry

It's a Good Food in Any of Its Several Forms

Milk in any form is excellent food for poultry. Milk, because of its ability to stimulate rapid growth of chicks, gives them that added little impetus to prosper and hurry past the coccidiosis peril. Also the milk sugar seems to "raise thunder" with the coccidial parasite. Milk, because of the fact that chickens love it, is a good stimulant for egg production among pullets just starting to lay, and hens entering the autumn doldrums. It gives that bit of high protein in addition to the regular diet which brings more eggs. Skim milk or buttermilk, sweet or sour, is fine for replacing part or all of the otherwise indispensable meat ration.

The above may be termed a mosaic of official views, as expressed in circulars and from the public rostrum. It does not represent one man's opinion, but the opinion of many experimenters.

There is but little difference in feeding value between fresh, semisolid and dried milk products. Modern processes of manufacture seem not to change the quality of the nutrients, hence the value of each case depends upon the amount of contained solids. A pound of dried milk is, roughly speaking, equivalent to three and one-third pounds of semisolid milk or ten pounds of fresh skimmed milk. Fresh milk is not mentioned because its cost is prohibitive. Nor is there any difference between sweet and sour milk, though either sweet or sour should be fed, changes encouraging digestive upsets.

While dry mash has pretty well succeeded moist mashes on the coast, milk may be used in mixing the mash if it is to be fed moist, or the milk can be kept before the fowls as a drink. If it be clabbered or cheeselike, the hens will eat enough to replace the meat scrap.

Dried skimmed milk is a good chick food. At least 10 per cent of the mash should be of this fine food, and at least 40 per cent in case coccidiosis appears. It might be a good idea to feed young stock three or four months of age, up to 40 per cent of the dried milk to promote thriftiness and resistance against the disease, continuing this feeding for several weeks.

AS OUR "MILK SHED" GROWS, HE MEETS NEW PROBLEMS VALIANTLY

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF AGRICULTURAL ACTIVITIES IN THE SOUTHWEST

Banning The apricot crop of Banning was estimated at the peak of the season in mid-July as approximately 2500 tons, as against a normal for the district of 4000 tons. Crews were busy picking as the fruit ripened quickly after the first week of the month. The green fruit market's earliest fruit came from Cabazon, going out in May. The Cutler-Lobingier Packing Company of Ontario took nearly all of the fine fruit grown on the Morongo Indian reservation and also bought a limited tonnage at Cabazon and in Banning. The reservation crop was all in by July 12. The Banning Canning Company handled part of the local crop and was worked to capacity. The greater part of the Banning crop, however, went to the drying plants of the Banning Drying Company and E. L. Robertson. Both worked with full crews to handle the fruit. Several small driers were also in operation. The low price paid for apricots brought discouragement to local growers, leading many of them to dry their fruit in the hope that a better figure would be paid for the dried product.

Fontana After some three decades in the passenger service of various railways, Charles A. Stevens has returned to his first love, San Bernardino county. Thirty years ago Stevens "punched" a telegraph key at San Bernardino. From that he went into railroading. During the succeeding years he was general passenger agent for the Santa Fe, the Chicago and Northwestern, and other systems at Chicago. When the time came for him to retire, he returned to San Bernardino county and bought a 2½ acre place at Fontana. Now he is a poultryman. Although he moved in only last Thanksgiving, he already has 1400 birds. He comments on the changes thirty years have wrought in this community, which he first knew as a great cattle range, but which has now become a well-settled region of small farm homes.

Famosa The first Thompson Seedless grapes should leave the Famosa district, from the Freevert ranch, about the last week in July, according to the figures of J. T. McCawley, horticultural inspector of the Delano-McFarland district. The Freevert ranch is in a thermal belt east of Famosa, in the edge of the foothills, and always has the earliest grapes in the district. A test made by Mr. McCawley early in July showed a satisfactory sugar content in the grapes, and they are expected to be sweet enough to ship in another week. The local crop is normally heavy, and in fine condition.

Lindsay The peach pack of the Peppers Fruit Company in Lindsay is estimated at sixty-five cars, following the recent signing of the entire crop of Elbertas of the Tagus Ranch, near Tulare. Tagus Ranch peaches heretofore have been consigned to canners. The fruit will be trucked to Lindsay. Other peaches will be brought in from Poplar and Exeter districts. Some J. H. Hales will also be packed. Twelve cars of Tragedy plums were packed at the Peppers plant.

Orange growers of this district are keeping their eyes on the "June drop," which seems about normal, having extended as usual into July. Both navel and Valencia trees had a heavy bloom this season and the setting of fruit has been heavy. The fruit is of good size, indicating good marketable sizes this fall.

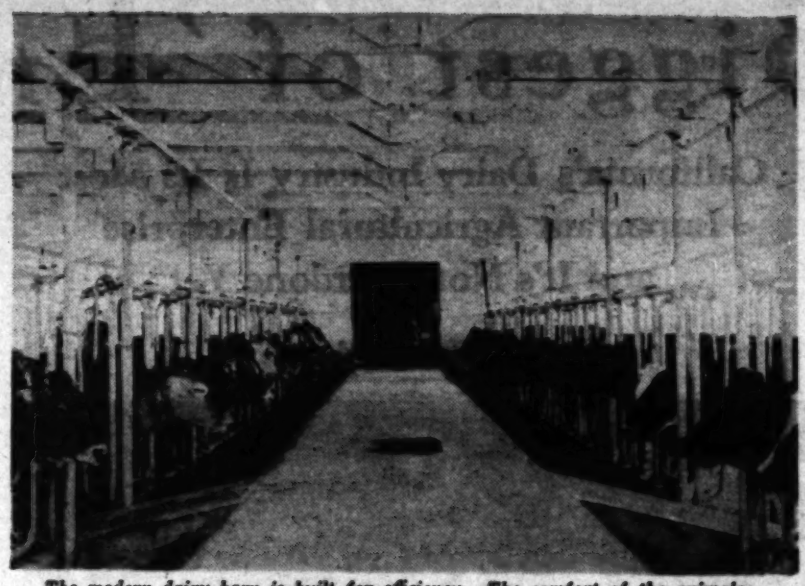
McFarland At least forty cars of cantaloupes will leave McFarland this season, the first car having gone out on the Fourth of July. The melons, which are of fine quality, are from the places of Clarence Rogers, I. Parks and O. C. Froelich, and total about seventy-five acres, according to an estimate made by Harry Hanna, fruit broker and melon grower. Heavy shipments of watermelons from the local fields started rolling during the early part of July, and the prices received have been good. There are about 200 acres of watermelons in this district.



The modern dairy barn is built for efficiency. The comfort of the animals, ease in feeding them and every requirement for cleanliness are features no good dairyman ever overlooks. This is the interior of the T. C. McReynolds dairy barn near Phoenix, Ariz.

San Fernando By utilizing the rear portion of a 50-foot lot, H. S. Carnahan of 219 Hagar street has solved the domestic fruit problem. Without the trees being cramped for room and with plenty of space for other requisites, Carnahan has five orange trees, two grapefruit, three olives, a persimmon, a lemon and a fig tree. Each tree is large and bearing regularly. Mr. Carnahan also has the irrigation problem in hand by not watering the olive trees. No water has been given them for the past few years, yet the trees are growing well and the new growth on several of the branches this season now measures more than a foot. The fig and persimmon trees are well laden this year as they also have been in past years. With all his trees, the owner still has space left for a garden.

La Verne Work will begin within the next three months on a new precooling plant and a lemon packing unit for the La Verne Co-operative Citrus Association, the local M.O.D. citrus house. Announcement of these improvements, which will total $85,000, is made by C. I. Cartwright, manager, and Walter Scott, assistant secretary. The new units were approved by the directors of the association at a recent meeting. The precooling plant will be of about eighty-car capacity. The new lemon plant is designated to relieve the main establishment of a present overload. The association orange equipment is to be enlarged by two sizers and one dryer. Work will start on the new units about September 15 and they will be ready in time for the next navel crop. The concern in its five-year existence has shown an increase from 173 carloads of fruit shipped in 1924-25 to 753 carloads in 1928-29. The improvements will enable it to accept for membership considerable acreage which has been on its waiting list.

Rio Bravo Although 7151 pounds of certified pure milo maize seed were sold to growers in Kern county by the Kern County Farm Bureau this year, the supply was not equal to the demand, and the amount will no doubt be increased next season, according to T. The sum of $276.47 was realized from the sale of seed, of which $94 went to reimburse the Farm Bureau treasury on the loan made earlier in the year for carrying on the work.

Redlands Vinton Gregory, manager of the Orangedale Groves' Fruit Association, with a big packing-house on Nevada street, has just returned from a trip through Canada and the East. He says that while business conditions in the East are not the best, he feels sure there will be a demand for California oranges during the coming season. He went to Florida, where he was interested in seeing citrus groves, packing-houses and also inspection for Mediterranean fruit fly. In Florida he was the guest of A. M. Pratt of the Florida Citrus Exchange, formerly the sales manager for the Mutual Orange Distributors in Redlands. Mr. Pratt says that Florida will have a larger crop to ship the coming season than last season, but not as large as that of two years ago. Not a single fruit fly has been found in Florida this season, Mr. Gregory reports, and only four larvae have been discovered.

Holtville More than fifty poultrymen attended a recent meeting at the D. B. Robertson ranch near Holtville to hear J. W. Mac Adams, nationally known extension specialist, speak on the poultry industry and its problems. The speaker answered many questions and discussed local and national conditions. The Robertson ranch this year is undertaking the raising of 10,000 baby chicks. Mr. Mac Adams spent three days looking over Imperial Valley poultry ranches and expressed the opinion that the outlook for the business is excellent in this area.

The new extension of the Southern Pacific Railway into Holtville has been completed. It was built to accommodate the growing industries of this section, particularly the vegetable crops.

Mentone A nursery with 32,000 seedling citrus trees has been developed by W. E. Howard near here, and from this he will set out 200 additional acres of fruit in the spring of 1932. The new planting will be a third grapefruit, a third Valencia oranges and a third navel oranges. Mr. Howard now has eighty acres planted to citrus fruit in this district. The Howard nursery is irrigated with an overhead sprinkling system. It is not a commercial project, since the product is all meant for Mr. Howard's own lands in the Mentone area. Avocados give promise of being a successful crop, Mr. Howard thinks, and recently he set out 700 trees.

Reno, Nev. The first attack of grasshoppers upon agricultural crops in Nevada this year has been repulsed with practically no loss to the farmer, but tremendous casualties to the "hoppers," according to the report of J. C. Genasci, extension agent in the Humboldt-Pershing-northern Lander district, to the Nevada agricultural extension service. Tobin brothers' ranch, along the Humboldt River near Winnemucca, was the scene of the battle against the pests. Thousands of the insects infested about 500 acres of wild hay on the ranch. Poisoned bait, consisting of twenty-five pounds of wheat bran containing no middlings, one pound of paris green, two quarts of molasses, one-half dozen chopped lemons and three gallons of water, was scattered thinly at the rate of about five pounds to the acre. The kill was effective and practically all the crop was saved. A slight infestation of the hoppers was noted on the same property last year, but no control measures were taken.

At the present time, with egg prices 10 cents a dozen below corresponding prices last year, many poultrymen are cutting costs of production by using barley in the ration. According to C. V. Castle, assistant county farm adviser, one-fourth of the mash can easily be a good grade of ground barley, and by educating the hens to like whole barley a considerable proportion of the scratch grains can be made up of whole barley. If the hens do not take readily to whole barley, it may be fed rolled or the whole barley may be swelled by soaking in water. Many poultrymen are feeding the scratch grain in troughs or hoppers, thus inducing greater consumption and preventing contamination, which often results from feeding grain on the ground or in the litter.

Porterville The Porterville plant of the Neuhoff Cannery Company opened on peaches the middle of July and will continue until late in September, according to Manager E. J. Stewart. Phillip clings will be followed by Tuscans. The apricot pack was finished July 3, around 43,000 cases of 940 tons being canned. A force of 450 to 500 persons was employed for several weeks.

W. E. The Chino 4-H boys defeated the Fontana 4-H boys and the San Bernardino 4-H boys and the Chino 4-H girls played the San Bernardino 4-H girls in a round of ball games. A rolling-pin throwing contest, a wheelbarrow drive and other amusements featured the afternoon program. Leon O. Acre Farming in Land of Sunshine Just Suits Former Chicagoans

WHILE small farm homes are largely developed in the many desirable communities close to Los Angeles, they are not entirely confined to this immediate area. Every county in Southern California boasts of many successful "little landers," men and women whose objective has been a home with truly rural surroundings.

An instance of this is seen in the case of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Milnor of Elsinore, whose acre place overlooking Lake Elsinore is one of the interesting places of the region. The Milnors were new to California, and, according to Mrs. Milnor, were sold an acre place by a "super real estate salesman." However, in spite of the handicap of raw land without water, they have developed a real acre home which supplies a good deal of their living.

Their experiences, as related in a letter prepared by Mrs. Sophie Milnor as one of the conditions of entry in the recent Farm and Garden Magazine-Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce Small Farm Home Contest, follow: "In July, 1924," says Mrs. Milnor, "we left Chicago in a Ford touring car equipped with a camping outfit and started to tour to the land of sunshine—California. After spending two months sightseeing we were very glad to see Los Angeles.

"We spent the next few months taking real estate trips and finally a supersalesman sold us an acre in Elsinore. We had no intention of locating permanently, as we have a home in Chicago. It was a beautiful picture that this salesman painted for us on this raw land, covered with sagebrush, land not even level and with no water at that time. We knew nothing about California farming.

"We decided to see just what could be done. Not having a whole lot of money to spend on this project we only bought a few trees at a time, planting the first ones in April, 1925. Since then, each year we have planted a few more until we now have the following: eight walnuts; one almond; eight apricots; twelve peaches; one prune; two plums; six figs; one pear; two grapefruit; six oranges; one loquat; one quince; one lime; one apple; two avocados; ten grapevines, and all varieties of berries.

"In this glorious land of fruit and sunshine we have more freedom, being out of doors most of the time. We have all the fruit and vegetables we can eat and are able to live 'like kings.' This we could not do in Chicago.

"Our poultry and garden have supplied most of our living. Mr. Milnor helps the neighbors, being a good carpenter and electrician. He also helps the larger farmers in gathering their crops.

"During the winter months it only takes about four hours a day to care for the poultry, and to do odd jobs around the place. Spring, summer and fall we are busy from sunrise to sunset planting, watering and gathering fruits and vegetables for market.

"Every year the place is plowed. We have a wheel hoe, spades, hand hoes, etc. Probably in the very near future we will buy a small tractor. By using it we will save more time and Mr. Milnor will be able to help some of the smaller farmers with it.

"We have a water line which runs the length of the place with hydrants at every row for irrigating, also, a water line to the poultry yards.

"We produce all kinds of vegetables—everything from lettuce to potatoes, also watermelons, Jap melons and Persian melons. Our melons are quite well known in Elsinore.

"We like our home very much and have often wondered why other people do not take advantage of a place like this. Our home is located four miles south of Elsinore, which is on the inland route between Los Angeles and San Diego, and we are on a hill overlooking beautiful Lake Elsinore."

COACHELLA.—With the Oasis district coming into its kingdom, the grape crop of Coachella Valley is on its way to market. The first carloads were of Thompson Seedless shipped by E. H. Morton, and by Jones and Johnson, all coming from the Oasis district. Express shipments to date also include 350 crates of Khalili and 420 crates of Dizmars. All varieties are showing very good quality of table product and are testing 20 per cent and higher in sugar content.

The Mecca Growers' Association reports its plant going at top speed with a car a day rolling to market. Mr. Yost, the manager, says that the first car shipped to Boston brought $4.80 per crate there and that later shipments have returned from $4 to $4.50. Urick and Hollis also report shipments going out at the rate of a car a day, with the quality good. Jones and Johnson of the Oasis district are doing their packing this year with a field crew of Italian packers, while the packing plant on the Narbonne Ranch is a scene of activity. The grape crop of the entire valley is principally of table varieties and includes approximately 2000 acres of vineyards.

Peach Men Cheered

CHINO.—Peach growers of the Chino-Ontario district are optimistic following a meeting held on June 26 for discussion of the 1930 peach pool. The situation was analyzed and action was started toward the signing up of a full pool membership. Reports from officials of the northern pool were to the effect that northern canners contemplate asking $30 a ton for fruit, with the provision that $7 of that amount is to go into a special fund to reimburse growers who will be forced to allow their fruit to hang on the trees, because of overproduction. Growers of this district have no overproduction problem, however, as the crop hereabouts is unusually short this year.

Particularly encouraging reports were made relative to the fresh fruit situation this year, and growers are satisfied that they will be able to market many peaches through that channel.

Some fifty growers attended the meeting, which was presided over by Ashley Bliss, president. John R. Cameron is secretary of the organization.

Money in "Pets"

School Boy Realizes Profits From Animals He Keeps

OJAI.—Most boys raise pets just for the pleasure they get out of them, but Howard Hughes, a young boy in the Ojai High School, not only derives pleasure, but profit and knowledge as well from his pets. Howard has six New Zealand Red rabbit does and a buck and is raising rabbits for the local market. He will have eleven for the butcher in a short time. He keeps careful records showing the amount of time spent caring for the stock, the kind and price of feed purchased and the profit derived from sales. He says that from February to June he made a profit of $30 besides gaining valuable experience. His hutches are built according to approved plans and he is making a study both at home and in his agricultural class in school of the best methods of feeding.

Howard has worked out a handy little home-made watering device for his rabbits. He uses two sizes of tin cans for a mould, the smaller can fitting inside the larger and leaving about one-half inch of space between the two. This space is filled with concrete and when the cans are removed he has a little watering trough that is too heavy for the rabbits to knock about and spill.

In addition to the rabbits, the boy has a 2-months-old Jersey calf which he has just weaned and is starting to feed on milk and meal.

This calf will be a prize winner if feed and care will turn the trick, says her schoolboy owner, Howard Hughes.

The Dairyman's Profits

AS OUR "MILK SHED" GROWS, HE MEETS NEW PROBLEMS VALIANTLY

By C. V. Castle

WITH the enlargement of the Los Angeles "milk shed," taking in districts heretofore considered cream-producing areas, local Los Angeles and near-by dairymen must recognize another element of competition that they have not had to consider seriously in the past.

Until recently, competition in producing milk was largely local. As long as a satisfactory basic price was obtained, the local surplus was the only endangering factor, and at times this did not cut much figure. Since the drop in butter prices all over the United States, however, butter-producing dairymen are looking toward the whole-milk markets to obtain a better price for their product. This means real competition, since their milk is in a different class from local surplus and cannot be controlled in the same manner as a local surplus, without a possible drop in the basic price for whole milk in the cities.

In spite of the threatened competition from outside areas, such as San Joaquin Valley, local dairymen have been increasing their surplus milk, which is marketed at a loss, thereby reducing the net price received.

Creameries and condenseries can only pay so much for milk, generally based on United States or world prices, and when market milk begins to come from areas that have been producing condensed milk or butter, there is always a tendency for all the dairymen in such a district to want to sell their product as market milk for the higher price, notwithstanding it may cost enough more to produce the market milk so that they are not much better off than before. The matter of markets seems to adjust itself in districts where this has happened, as the quality of the product tends to rise, allowing the creameries and condenseries to pay a little more than they have been paying, and the price of market milk tends to drop, so that finally a balance is struck, where a farmer will receive as good a return from one market as another, considering cost of production and transportation.

In meeting competition from the outside areas, the local dairymen have some advantages and some disadvantages. They pay more for hay, but can generally buy concentrates cheaper. They pay more for cows, but can get more for cull cows and veal calves. They have less transportation to pay on milk, and being closer to the ultimate consumer, can get their milk to market in better shape. Fertilization has a much higher value near Los Angeles because of the demands from the citrus growers.

One of the most important advantages that the near-by man has is that he is generally not bothered by having to grow feed and can give his full time and thought to producing milk. This should be a considerable advantage to the man who must meet competition, but hasn't always been a factor. Before competition was a real thing, too many local dairymen paid little attention to cost of production and failed to give their cows the individual attention that must be given to keep production costs low.

Now, with increased competition, the man who will not attend to business and develop a high-producing herd will have eventually to quit or be satisfied with a very small income.

During the past two years, while taking heavy losses on tuberculosis eradication, and at times heavy losses on surplus, many dairymen have consistently made some money. These were the dairymen who were staying home attending to business, watching production costs and maintaining a high-herd average for milk and butter fat. High production, obtained without hurting the cows by injudicious feeding, certainly pays in this area. For the most part, a cow is simply a unit in a milk factory. The dairyman buys feed and manufactures milk. As in other manufacturing plants his profits increase if he can get more output per unit, or in other words per cow.

With cows capable of high production, he makes most who utilizes the cows' capacity the best. If he has cows that are not capable of high production he cannot meet the competition, and he will have to shut down the factory. A good factory manager takes good care of his machinery and tries to make it last a long time. Some of our dairymen have not considered this enough, and are continually replacing high-priced cows, their machinery, because they have burned them out through injudicious feeding.

Getting Production

Profitable herd in this area is a high-producing herd, and we might now consider how to get and maintain a high-producing herd. Rather than expound theories, I believe it might be more interesting to give a few actual examples. Take Frampton Brothers at Artesia. This herd of pure-bred Holsteins has averaged 522 pounds of fat per cow for the past three years, with a high year of 554 pounds. In 1918 the herd, about the same size as now, but consisting mostly of grades and a few pure-breds, averaged 200 pounds of fat per cow. All these records were made in the Farm Bureau Cow-Testing Association.

One dairy outfit which has solved the problem of keen competition and high costs by increasing the output of its cows. Here are twelve of the Frampton dairy farm cows at Artesia. Every one of them produced over 600 pounds of butter fat in a year on two-time milkings.

DeKol Korndyke Keeva, one of Frampton Brothers' fine Holsteins. She produced, on two-time milkings, 846.6 pounds of butter fat in one year, and 846.2 pounds the next. Her dam produced 716.5 pounds of fat and her better performance tells the Framptons' story.

The first step in building up the Frampton herd was to find out what they had by cow testing. The second step was to breed up with good pure-bred sires, and needless to say, good ones were used. The bull now in use is Sir Acme of Monrovia, a proven sire with a world record daughter.

As soon as the heifers began to come fresh, the poorer cows were sold to the butcher, and as production gradually increased, a cow had to be that much better to remain in the herd.

As the herd grew better and better through breeding and culling, the Framptons had to feed better to utilize the increased abilities of the cows, and they have found that increased concentrate feeding almost doubled the production on some of their best cows. They were careful, however, not to overfeed, and have had no trouble from "burned-out" cows. At the present time they have to do but very little culling. Their replacements are at a minimum, and they will be able to sell cows for dairy purposes rather than to the butcher.

The Frampton plan of herd building is one to be generally recommended where facilities are available for raising calves. Replacement costs are lower, production is more consistent, and there is less chance of introducing disease. Walter Thompson of Burbank has developed a 500-pound herd along the same lines, and so have many other dairymen in the county.

On the other hand, there are numerous small dairymen on rented places where there is but small opportunity for raising calves unless the young animals can be sent to calf farms or pastures. In spite of this, many of these dairymen have developed high-producing herds. In this work the cow-testing association has played the major part. Cows are purchased, generally at auction, and needless to say these men are pretty good judges of cows. However, none of them depend upon looks. The cow, once purchased, must put the milk and butter fat in the pail as shown by the tester on his monthly visits. Cows that do not come up to standard are sent to the butcher regardless of what they have cost.

As a rule, extremely heavy feeding is practiced in these parts, for the dairyman wants the cow to have a chance to show what she can do. This heavy feeding is often overdone, and results, in many cases, in good cows going bad. Hence replacement costs in such herds take too great a share of the profits. There is also a chance of introducing disease when so many cows are added to the herd each year.

In spite of these drawbacks, many high-producing herds have been gathered together, and their operators, as a rule, have made good money. Some of the most successful at this method have been J. R. Vandermeir of Norwalk, whose herd last year averaged 568 pounds of fat per cow; V. De Pante of Van Nuys, whose herd of 178 cows averaged 412 pounds; and at least twenty others in the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau Cow-Testing Association whose herds averaged over 400 pounds of fat last year.

I have mentioned the heavy replacement costs necessary with this method, especially when cows are high priced and quality not as good as usual. Because of this, the majority of the large herds are using a combination, raising the heifers from their best cows and rigidly culling cows they have to buy. The Adohr Stock Farm, Reseda, using this system, averaged 409 pounds of fat last year with 1140 cows.

In order for the average local dairyman to meet the impending competition, he will have to secure higher production with a lower replacement cost, and will really have to go about building high-producing herds.

It's Constitutional

Supreme Court Passes on Law's Indemnity Clause

The Supreme Court of California, in a decision handed down on April 21 of this year, ruled that the indemnity provision of the bovine tuberculosis law is constitutional. It stated that the provision for partial indemnification by the State does not constitute a gift, but is a reasonable legislative conception of the proper method of serving a public purpose.

Reimbursement of owners for cattle slaughtered on account of tuberculosis has been adopted by forty-five States, by Hawaii and Alaska, as a part of the bovine tuberculosis plan.

The bovine tuberculosis law of California was passed in 1929, but many believed that the indemnity provision was unconstitutional. The Legislature provided sufficient funds for trying a test case. The statute went into effect last August, and a test case was brought as soon as it could legally be arranged. Two animals were tested, found to be reactors, appraised, branded, slaughtered and the State Comptroller refused to draw a warrant in payment of the claim made for indemnity.

A friendly suit followed to compel the issuance of the warrant, the case was carried to the Supreme Court and decided in behalf of the plaintiff.

Since the Legislature has no money appropriated for other indemnities, it will be up to that body to make further appropriations for that purpose.

The act now tested by our highest court provides indemnity only in what are designated as bovine tuberculosis control areas which must be declared by the director of agriculture.

They Learned How

City Couple Carve Out Farm in Antelope Valley Desert

By F. H. Colman

"IF YOU had told us seven years ago that a cypress tree was a pear tree we would have believed you," says Mrs. Rudolph Jungi. Certainly not a very promising start for Mr. and Mrs. Jungi, who proposed to make an eighty-acre tract of Joshua trees and sagebrush blossom forth into a pear orchard. But that is exactly what they did. Mr. Jungi was a stationary engineer who had never lived on a ranch. His wife had lived on a farm only until she was eight years old.

Seven years ago they came to Antelope Valley to visit friends and liked the climate so much that they looked around for a piece of land for themselves. They finally found a tract five miles east of Palmdale which took their fancy. They consulted one friend, who was a pioneer in the valley, as to the possibilities of the soil. His advice was that they could grow almost anything on the soil if they got water.

With this assurance they bought the eighty acres and their first development was a well. At 325 feet they struck water and then began the real work of pioneering. They had water enough to take care of thirty-five acres. The place was a forest of Joshua trees and brush. They had a tractor that served as a beast of all kinds of burdens; not only was it used for clearing the land, but also to prepare the soil for trees, to haul out the brush, to dig the irrigation ditches and, for two years, to pump all of the water for irrigating until they got an engine.

The first spring they put out twenty-two acres of pear trees and Mr. Jungi, with the help of his son, built a cozy five-room house. Around the house they put out apricots, apples, currants and peaches, as well as several cottonwoods for shade. Gradually they put out flowers, shrubs and a lawn, and as the cottonwoods grew, the place became a little oasis in the desert.

From the very first, the Jungis worked on the theory that the most important consideration for the trees was plenty of water. They have never stinted on irrigation, and their orchard is now, at seven years, one of the most flourishing in the neighborhood. This year their pears, apricots and other trees are loaded and the currants are producing very large fruits in abundance.

Along the road is a tamarix hedge for a windbreak, and beyond this windbreak extends a tract of desert, with its brush and Joshua trees—the same desert that the Jungis found seven years ago when they came to develop their place. This district could make good use of a few more such hardy pioneers who have the courage to leave the city, where they are sure of themselves, and go into a field that is to them unknown, by sheer hard work carving out for themselves a homestead that provides comfort, beauty and a living.

Before and after—the result of seven years' work in Antelope Valley by a city couple, Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Jungi. Above, the new home and the baby pear orchard seven years ago. Below, the shady house and the bearing trees as they appear today.

Watering Roses

The immediate season of the year isn't exactly conducive to undue activity but, for the forehanded gardener, July and August simply cannot be a real period of rest from garden work. As a group, the perennials are simply indispensable and, as it happens, the latter part of July and the month of August mark that point in the life of many of them where it is possible to make root divisions of mature plants. It also happens to be the right time of year to start seeds of perennials which take a considerable length of time before they get to the blooming point.

There are irises to be divided and reset. Foxgloves, which are becoming as popular these days as they were a number of years ago, can be propagated by root division in August. So can the delicate and appealing heuchera, or coral bells. In fact, some plants will be ready for division in July. You can divide and transplant from your old clumps of perennial phlox, if you are lucky enough to have some. It takes two or three years to make a good big plant, but root division should be made every three or four years or they will not do so well.

Incidentally, speaking about phlox—if the plants are pinched back through June and early July, they will spread out and make stronger, more floriferous plants. Some people cut them back after the first flowers drop and secure, by that means, a second crop of bloom late in the season.

There is one great advantage about the garden soil at this time which is largely responsible for the benefits to be gained by working now. It is warm and much more friable than it was early in the season or than it will be later. The seeds respond to the warmth and lightness of it and the tiny rootlets of things transplanted can take hold and grow vigorously with no resistance offered from the soil and no checking because of cold, chilling temperatures.

Seeds for some of the slower-growing perennials should be started in August and it would be a forehanded thing to get all the necessary equipment prepared. Success in handling these things just about makes a cold frame and a bit of lath house imperative It is a great deal more interesting to raise your garden from seeds than to buy it in plant form, a method that those who have no equipment and available space have to employ. The cold frame and lath protections are not hard to make and need not be costly or extensive. They provide interesting employment for boys who like to tinker around with a bit of lumber, a hammer and nails. It may be that the boy is the head of the family and fully grown, but if he still likes to fuss around with such things, here's a good outlet for that carpentering urge.

Jobs a-Begging!

Opportunities for men trained in dairy manufacture are good in the western States, declare C. A. Phillips and F. A. Abbott of the University of California's dairy industry division. Mr. Phillips says that alumni of the college of agriculture are to be found in nearly every dairy manufacturing plant of importance in the State. Demand for trained men far exceeds the supply, says Mr. Abbott, and at present, places for several good men at substantial salaries are going begging.

"Past" Grower Sees Future in the Production of Seed

By Guy Bogart

BEAUMONT.—Knee-deep in June meant waist-high in July on an onion seed planting in Sam T. Gantt's Beaumont ranch. With fourteen acres ready for harvest, and all contracted for by a Texas buyer, Mr. Gantt is well pleased with his venture. While onions have proven profitable in Beaumont and Banning during the past two years, Mr. Gantt's crop is considered about the best demonstration there is of this valuable adjunct to cherries, peaches and other San Gorgonio Pass agricultural products.

Mr. Gantt's onions are planted in two seven-acre tracts in West Cherry Valley. One tract was put out exclusively to onions; the other is a planting between rows of 2-year-old cherry trees. The crop has been given the best of scientific care since it was planted last October and November. Harvesting takes place from mid-July to early August and the yield is estimated at a net of 700 to 800 pounds per acre. During the winter no irrigation was required, but the extreme dryness of last fall made five or six waterings necessary where in ordinary seasons two would have sufficed.

The soil is a sandy loam, and Texas buyers declare the San Gorgonio Pass Bermudas are of excellent quality.

Whether Mr. Gantt will continue his onion growing next year will be contingent on an advance contract for his harvest. "It is a mistake," he says, "to plant a large crop merely on the chance of being able to dispose of it, for it is expensive to produce a successful crop of onion seed."

Mr. Gantt is a successful business man of many years experience in Beaumont and Banning, having come to the Pass district from the South. He has turned to agriculture to supplement his mercantile investments and is approaching ranching with keen business methods.

Other tracts of Pass onion seed are doing well. It is believed that on soils that are suitable and which have necessary water available the business can be conducted profitably in years to come.

Treating Pear Blight

Pear blight, which has been a serious problem with California growers, has been reduced very materially by the zinc chloride treatment, it is said in a recently issued circular, Number 45, from the agricultural extension service, entitled "Zinc Chloride Treatment for Pear Blight Cankers." This circular contains the considerable quantity of new information which has been gathered since the introduction of the treatment. Because the application of the remedy calls for knowledge, the circular goes rather fully into the process. Those who wish a copy of the publication may obtain it from any farm adviser or from the College of Agriculture at Berkeley.

Started on test when four years and seven months of age, she produced 591.53 pounds of butter fat and 12,560 pounds of milk during the ensuing 305 days.

How Times Change!

EARLY MEMORIES OF DAIRY OPERATIONS

By H. H. Bushnell

MY experience as a dairyman began at an early age—ten—in a small town in Kansas. A neighbor was going away for a few months and as we had an unoccupied barn he suggested that we look after his cow during his absence. My father thought that association with the cow-milking, feeding and caring for her would develop in me some of the higher and fundamental things of life. He also hoped it might teach business sense and responsibility. So he made me the following proposition: He would furnish the barn and the hay; pasturage was free at the edge of the town; I was to milk and care for the animal and buy bran or mill feed; the family was to get what milk it could use, including my own consumption which was heavy, and I could sell all the rest.

I took a look at the creature; she was large and ungainly—something like myself. She had a kind and placid look, which her behavior belied. Each morning I milked her and led her reluctant feet forth to the lone prairie, attached her halter ring to a thirty-foot rope, screwed the picket pin into the sod and left her to gather sustenance from the buffalo grass and bluestem. In the evenings I would coax and storm at her to get her home. She was unwilling to go faster than the gait of a dilatory snail as long as I led her, but when I tried driving she would accelerate her speed to a lumbering but furious gallop.

In those halcyon days we drew water from a fifty-foot well by means of two old oaken and moss-covered buckets attached to either end of a rope running over an overhead pulley. Each evening this cow drank eleven bucketsful of water, each morning eight. She had twice-a-day milking and yielded a copious supply of pale milk, around seven gallons at night and about four in the morning, I should guess. Her breed was doubtful, but from my memory of her some Shorthorn blood percolated through her veins.

She had acquired a most annoying habit of switching her tail regardless of the presence or absence of flies. In the dead of winter she would manage to drag her switch through the milk pail and then with practiced skill cut me across the face with a stinging crack like a whiplash. Expostulation and disciplinary measures were of no avail.

In the winter her teats got sore, probably because I did not dry them properly after washing them. So she learned to kick swiftly and accurately. I tried tying her right hind hoof to the back of the barn, but when she found her freedom of expression thus limited she kicked with such rapidity that the naked eye could not follow her foot and the rope wore out and broke. I tied her hind feet together and then with one mighty effort she fell down—on me. She stepped on my foot at least twice a day, but her average was higher than that.

I sold quite a bit of milk to the neighbors. As I recall it, I cut the regular milkman's price down to 4 cents a quart. When I figured up after the winter had passed and spring had come, I was ahead of the game about $2.50, but I was out of millfeed, for she was a noble feeder. So I invested my net profits in feed which I kept in a large vinegar barrel in an unused stall. The barrel was just about full.

That night the cow broke loose. By morning she had eaten down two-thirds the way in the barrel. She would have licked the platter clean had it not been for her horns. Next morning she drank fifteen bucketsful of water. I hoped she would die, but beyond an increased sluggishness of movement in going to pasture she showed no ill effects.

One evening my father expostulated with me because I lingered so long on the way home. Smarting under this injustice I pertly suggested that he try it and he agreed. I did not accompany him, but put up the bars at the back of the lot and waited expectantly at the tape. As I had hoped, he elected to drive her (he was a Presbyterian and believed in election.) When they hove in sight she was bounding along in uncouth leaps while father fluttered at the end of the rope like a flag. She vaulted the bars without touching and he was dragged across. Father was a dignified man and said nothing. He made no more complaints about my being late.

One night as I sat milking, she slashed me across the eyes with her liquid fertilizer-soaked tail several times. I snarled at her and she deftly kicked me over, placing her filthy hoof in the nearly filled pail. I rose to my full height and cursed her by all my gods and hers, with embellishments learned in a printing office and from profitable listening to a gang of mule skinners and railway tracklayers. I did a thorough and comprehensive job, going back even unto the third and fourth generations. Father, who by the way, was a minister, was standing just outside the door.

His fond hope that my association with that cow was cultivating a wholesome mental attitude and purging my soul of the grossest part of my original sin was shattered. The neighbor had come home, and next morning the first cow in my life had gone.

Little did I think then, as I drew a great sigh of relief, that the day would come when I would like dairy cows; that I would enjoy milking, really; that the life of the dairyman would attract and hold me.

The dairy business has undergone some tremendous changes in forty years. It's a wonder that anybody engaged in it then. The old barns didn't bear the remotest resemblance to the spotless institutions of today; the methods in vogue then would not be endured now; the cows themselves are different. We did know something about feeding, just the same.

On a Big Scale

Not long ago the president of one of the large milk concerns in a city of a half million inhabitants in the Middle West was being shown through one of the large milk plants in Los Angeles, says Certified Milk Magazine. As this plant handled about the same daily volume as his own, he asked how many shippers contributed the supply, and was astonished to learn that all the milk came from seventy-five to eighty shippers only, whereas his plant in the Midwest had to take milk from something like 1200 shippers in order to get the same volume. This is a fair example of the scale on which dairies are operated on the coast.

A "Milk Wagon"

The new world's champion milk producer among Holsteins is Amanda Fayne Pietertje, a 12-year-old cow owned by Carnation Milk Farms of Seattle, Wash. Her yearly record was 31,622.4 pounds of milk containing 1042.7 pounds of butter fat.

The calf is an important factor in dairying nowadays. If they have the production back of them the dairyman will find it means money in his pocket to disregard the butcher's wiles and raise them or get them raised for him.

The Golden Calf

IF IT'S A GOOD ONE IT'S WORTH RAISING

By Sam H. Greene

BECAUSE of the high production cost of milk in Southern California, dairymen have been compelled to purchase the best producing animals that could be found. They have gone far afield to secure animals whose production records would show good returns. The growing value of land in the south, caused by the rapidly increasing population, and the increased cost of supplying water for irrigation, has made it impossible for dairymen to make any money unless whole herds are heavy producers of butter fat.

It has been the practice of most dairymen to dispose of calves as soon as they are born, to butchers for veal, or in some cases even killing the calves and burying them, in order to have all the milk to sell at once, rather than to feed the calves.

This has proven to be an unsound practice, for the time has now come when it is almost impossible to replace animals discarded from the herd, with other animals who can equal the production of those which preceded them. In other words, the good cows which have passed the period of usefulness, or have been eliminated from the herd for other reasons, cannot be replaced with cows which are up to their standard. Many of the larger producers have seen the error of such a policy, and for some time have been raising the females from their best producing cows, but even then, in most cases, they have not been able to secure enough for all replacements.

The saving of calves from the herds of California for replacements now offers a new industry, and one that will pay well for the time and effort spent upon it. Without doubt, the conservation of the female calves of the good producing animals of all the herds will be needed for the next few years, as a program for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis is under way, and those engaged in this new project will surely reap rewards from it.

If dairymen will secure a pure-bred bull to head their herd, they will probably find a new source of revenue from the sale of heifer calves to persons who will take the time and trouble to raise them. The building up of production can only be done by intelligent testing for butter fat, and using a pure-bred bull of known good-producing ancestors.

If dairymen will take the trouble to investigate, they will find it is now possible to secure a good sire on easy terms without the outlay of any immediate cash. If herds are tested for butter fat and records are kept for reference much additional revenue may be had from the sale of calves.

Feeding the Baby

By Ira P. Whitney

ONE of the major problems confronting the dairyman of Southern California is that of herd replacement. The area covered by the enterprising cow buyer has been gradually extended until the entire western portion of the United States has been concerned with the problem of producing suitable dairy cows to meet the growing needs of Southern California. We have gone the limit to get cows that will meet the demands of this section and still the demand has not been met.

The dairy farmer has felt that it cost too much to raise his own heifers. As a consequence he has repeatedly purchased his replacements until he has found the price soaring beyond his reach, while the quality of the stock available has been gradually getting poorer and poorer. The larger dairies have shown the way out by raising the heifers from their best cows. They have been surprised to find that they were getting better replacements at a less cost than when they were shipping in outside, mature cows. Again, the price of skim-milk powder has come down to a point that the dairyman must feed but a small amount of whole milk, gradually replacing it with reunized dry skim milk of good quality. The smaller dairymen are rapidly falling into line and today hundreds of dairy heifers are being raised where only a very few were saved a few years ago.

There are three outstanding points to be considered in raising dairy heifers—correct breeding, correct feeding and good health.

A poorly bred heifer is always a cull and it will not pay anyone to raise her. Remember that the sire is more important than the dam and if the heifer is from a scrub bull the chances are that she will be a scrub also, no matter how good a cow she is from. So often we hear somebody say, "I saved this heifer because she was from my best cow."

Only a pure-bred registered bull should be used and he must justify his existence by producing heifers better than their dams. We are making progress, but I am sure that I may safely say that not to exceed 50 per cent of the heifers being raised have an even chance of being better than their dams.

To properly grow and develop the dairy heifer, correct food, both in quantity and quality, is important. Lucky is the heifer that can spend the major portion of her time from six months to two years of age in pasture. The proper amount of feed is very important and when the pasture is short, see to it that the necessary supplementary feeds are supplied.

The weak, sickly heifer, as well as the stunted heifer, should never be raised. The heifer calf, full of vigor and vitality, that never misses a meal, is the one that will give a good account of herself when she freshens. There is no excuse for letting our heifers become infected with disease.

In Which We Settle That Old Argument About Watering Roses

IT IS almost too hot, these days, to start any arguments, but the time has come to bring up the subject of rose culture for the months of July and August. I am well aware of two existing schools, one might say, of rosarians, much divided on the subject of what is the best procedure to follow for this particular period of time. Each has its ardent adherents, well armed with flourishing examples and impressive authorities to cite. That being the case it might seem like my cue to be strictly neutral and merely present the two sides of the question. I can present both theories of practice and leave the choice to the individual gardener, but I can't quite see my way to assuming a neutrality I do not feel. In the course of this article, I imagine it will become evident which side of the argument has my sympathy.

There are some people whose ability to grow roses can hardly be questioned, who urge us to keep the water off the rose garden for the next six weeks—with the idea of inducing an enforced rest on the plants. They assert that the roses do not get this rest if they are cared for as they are the rest of the season. I've seen some very fine roses comes along in the fall following such treatment—no denying that.

On the other hand, others of unassailable standing as successful rosarians deplore this practice and condemn it in good round terms. Just to bolster up my own convictions and observations, I paid a visit recently to a grower who is generally conceded to be exceptionally expert in producing healthy, vigorous, floriferous roses. I put the question squarely to him without making any expression of opinion, myself. To water or not to water the roses at this time—that was for him to answer.

In answering, this man explained why he advocated, as he did, the continued irrigation of roses throughout the summer. "You will notice," he said, "that the bushes, regardless of whether you irrigate and cultivate at this time, look rather ragged and dejected and the flowers, if there are any, are nothing to be proud of. That is because the evaporation of moisture, during the very heated period, is greater than the absorption of moisture. In other words, the plant is more or less dormant, as a natural process, care or no care. By withholding water, you put an extra burden on it and sacrifice some of the vitality that could be put to better uses."

It is this man's opinion that deep irrigation, once every two weeks, should be applied to keep the plant normal. In selling roses for customers' gardens, the question is often put to him. In reply, he offers his opinions, urges people to do whatever they think best, but tells them if they force a dormant period on their plants, to come over to his grounds in late September and compare their own plants with his. That's throwing down the gauntlet, isn't it? But, I know how well he comes out in such a test, and to me, the proof of the pudding in this instance lies in the results he consistently shows.

I've known of several curious souls who had an opportunity to make a comparative test in their own plantings and did so and I've yet to find the person who has failed to subscribe to the theory of continued care, following such a test. There probably are plenty of people who can furnish examples to the contrary, however.

The big commercial rose-growing establishments have to continue irrigation in order to get the growth they need before digging time in the fall. Their case is different from that of the home gardener and I would hesitate to make a comparison between their practice and that of the individual gardener, but the fact that they do follow this plan doesn't damage my impression as to the worth of this system.

In the course of hunting down able rose growers and their methods, one runs into some odd things—very conflicting ones, too. The question arises as to cultivation. Most rosarians hold that the ground around the roots cannot be too firm and that at the surface cannot be too loose. In sections of the country where the natural rainfall takes care of providing the plants with sufficient moisture, the rootlets of the roses have a marked tendency to take a downward course, reaching after the dampness far below the surface. In this sun-baked Southland, where we have to give the plants all the water they get, we do not always follow the correct method of application. It should be run slowly into a deep trench a foot away from the base of the plant, or even farther, and allowed to penetrate to a considerable depth. If this is done, the rootlets will go downward, as in the other parts of the country. If we do frequent surface irrigation, we are going to have a root system which lies very close to the surface. Cultivation around the plant, under these circumstances, will result in continued damage to these rootlets and this will be reflected in the performance of the rose as a bloomer.

If you aren't one of those who irrigate deeply, let the surface of the ground be undisturbed, except for the removal of the weeds that appear—and get these while they are so young that you won't have to hoe them out. One of the strange conflictions I mentioned was the discovery of one very successful rose grower—who belongs to the professional group, at that—who flaunts the breaking of two cardinal principles of most rosarians. This man uses an overhead irrigation system and never cultivates except for weed removal. The overhead moisture is supposed to promote mildew troubles. Instead of that, this man has no trouble, due to the fact that he washes off the tiny spores before damage is done. The irrigation is frequent and thorough, of course. He certainly grows beautiful plants and fine blooms—so what is one to think?

Generally speaking, for the average garden arrangements and equipment, I should say that it would be safest to irrigate deeply and cultivate well.

The question of mulching is another one that confronts us. In the interests of conserving moisture, we all know that mulching is a great help, theoretically. From a practical standpoint, it depends upon what sort of mulch is used, and how it is used, whether good or harm results.

A mulch of thoroughly cured, well-pulverized, barnyard manure is hard to beat. It supplies some plant food as well as ample protection and may be safely used. It works to best advantage when the trench system of irrigation is followed.

Some people use lawn clippings. In many instances, where the bushes are set into a lawn, or are not planted in a separate place of their own, it is a particularly successful form of mulching. One thing should be guarded against, however. If the clippings are put on too generously, the mass of green grass will heat, just as fresh-cut alfalfa will, and damage to the plants will result.

There is another possible objection to lawn clippings and so to practically any form of mulching except plain peat moss, well pulverized. It is this; the mulching provides a fine breeding place for insect pests and for the spores of such afflicting diseases as mildew and black spot. In the latter instance, particularly, the mulch is a dangerous thing.

Black spot is a disease that afflicts our roses all too often. It first appears as a small black, rusty or yellow spot on a leaf. The discoloration spreads and leaves drop and, then, the plant is really sick. Some varieties are much more susceptible than others and it would be well to consider this fact in selecting roses for the garden. There has been no real cure discovered, so far, for this trouble. The best thing we can do is to prevent it. The use of a compound formed of nine parts dusting sulphur to one of powdered lead arsenate applied with a small dusting gun, every two or three weeks throughout the season, will go a long way toward keeping the disease out. If one part of powdered tobacco stems is added, the dusting will also keep down aphis and thrip.

All diseased foliage should be removed as soon as discovered and burned.

It is wise to hold off all fertilizers until September. The plants ought not to be forced in the least. They may need help in getting enough moisture, but they do not need any addition to their diet. In September, a very light pruning—a sort of cleaning up of the plant, and a good, stimulating application of fertilizer, will bring you a splendid early winter bloom of roses, here in this generous climate of ours.

THAT'S WHAT A MODERN DAIRY MUST BE

By C. U. Duckworth and H. S. Wakefield

THE problem of dairy farm sanitation is a very interesting one and has been for many years in the process of evolution. This process has been the result of public demand, economic necessity and scientific investigation. Revolutionary changes in transportation and rural life, together with organized marketing and distribution, have brought about radical changes in the handling of milk and its products. The good old family cow no longer resides next door to us, waking us in the early morning by her demands for her feed; nor do we have delivered by our neighbor, fresh, warm milk that spoils in a few hours. Bossy has moved out into the wide, open spaces where, with many others, she is handled as a unit in a businesslike manner. Her product is hauled over paved roads into the city, where a distributor places it on our doorstep or converts it into products such as butter, ice cream, cheese, etc. Some of the milk supply of the city of New York comes from a distance 500 miles away. Chicago obtains its milk from seven States, while Los Angeles obtains milk from nearly all of the counties in Southern California.

These developments have made necessary a study of methods and facilities for handling milk, that the consumer may be assured that the milk or dairy product delivered is a wholesome, clean, good-flavored food product. As the result of such studies and the combined efforts of health departments, producers and distributors in working out the problems involved, fairly definite practices have been brought about and are in general use throughout the industry today.

If we were to take a trip and follow our daily bottle of milk from its source, we should find, if it were receiving proper attention (and in nearly all cases it is,) that each individual participating in its production employs very nearly the following methods: On the dairy itself, we should find the surroundings presentable, the yard and premises clean and neat, no accumulation of manure, nor the yard full of baling wire, old tires or junk in general. The dairyman would explain to us that probably some of these things have no direct connection with the quality of the milk, but indicate to the public that if the dairyman is not particular about the general appearance of his premises, he probably is not taking proper care of his milk, and that the dairyman wishing to make a good impression endeavors to operate his dairy in such a manner as not to be offensive to the average observer. The dairy farm buildings would be found properly painted or whitewashed and in a good state of repair.

Health Is Emphasized

The cows would be found clean and well-groomed and, on the better dairies, the flanks and udders clipped to facilitate cleaning before milking. We inquire as to the health of the cows and are informed that they are tuberculin-tested and free from tuberculosis, as determined by official test, and in some cases, as in that of certified milk, the cows are also tested for contagious abortion. We should find the dairyman, if he is a good one, much interested in the health of the men employed by him, as well as in the health of his cows, as he does not wish to have any communicable disease transmitted through the medium of his milk. Certified dairies take the lead in these problems by having their employees examined regularly by a qualified physician. Other dairymen are rapidly following suit, as the importance of the health of the workers and cows becomes better known. The milk house where the milk is taken for cooling and prepared for shipment to the city is properly constructed, having a concrete floor, proper drainage and fly-tight screens, and used for no purpose other than the handling of milk. It is so located that the prevailing winds do not bring objectionable odors from the corrals or barns. The equipment is of tinned copper, nickel or stainless steel, well-soldered in the seams, smooth, shiny and clean at all times, in the particular dairies.

The producer would explain to us that all of his utensils, after being carefully washed, are sterilized in live steam or boiling water, and he would show us that he checks his sterilization with a thermometer as it is too important for him to guess at the temperature to which he has heated the utensils. He knows that good sterilization is his fundamental insurance of low bacterial counts on his milk.

Second in importance to the thorough washing and sterilization of all utensils coming into contact with the milk, is the cooling of the milk itself. The modern dairyman knows that cooling prevents the growth of bacteria and that milk will keep over longer periods of time at low temperatures without souring or developing off-flavors. Most dairymen are using electric refrigeration to assist in the production of high quality milk and those who do not are rapidly appreciating its value.

After cooling, the milk is put into sterilized cans for shipment to the city for distribution. If you were to follow the milk into the plant of the distributor, you would find in most cases that the business is conducted on a large scale, that the buildings and facilities provided for handling the milk represent an enormous investment, and that everything possible is done to apply technical, scientific methods in handling the product.

It may be said without fear of contradiction that the foundation of good dairy products rests with the dairy farmer, himself. He must realize that he has a moral obligation, first to the consumer of his milk, then to his own business and that of the distributor. It is essential that he have the proper respect for his milk as a food product and he should make every effort to keep up with the latest methods developed for the advancement of his business, for only in this way is the public going to be induced to use additional dairy products.

In summarizing, may we say that we believe it is reasonable to expect that every milk producer will give careful attention to the details of his business and be willing to keep clean, orderly, neat-appearing premises; provide proper, well-kept, well-appearing buildings; keep only healthy cows; wash his cows each time they are milked; sterilize utensils twice daily; provide mechanical refrigeration, remembering that someone is going to consume the milk produced, and handling it as he would handle it for his own babies.

Bossy gets a bath. In the certified dairy the cows are washed most thoroughly before each milking and a germ has little show of getting settled for its turbulent life in one of these establishments. This picture was taken in the Adohr milking barn.

Clean quarters indoors and outdoors keep the cows not only clean, but healthy, too. Sunshine, wholesome feed and enough of it, pure water—all add to the health of cows and consumers.

Six Years' Work

HOW BOVINE DISEASE WAS CLEANED UP

By Dr. L. E. Pike

WHEN we look back over the period since the program of cattle tuberculosis control and eradication was first inaugurated in Los Angeles county we can see many changes. The milk supply from nonreacting tuberculin-tested cows that is produced in this county today has been made possible by the groundwork that was laid six years ago. When this work was first inaugurated, it was recognized at once that the control of this disease among our cattle presented problems not encountered in less thickly populated counties. Here few heifers are raised to replace unprofitable individuals so we must depend upon outside sources for our dairy cattle supply.

The traffic in cattle is heavy. There is a constant movement of dairy cows from sales yards to dairies and from one dairy to another. A steady stream of supply animals are pouring into the county at the rate of about 26,000 a year. We recognize that Los Angeles county is the mecca of tourists but few realize than an average of seventy-five tourist cows arrive every day to take up their abode on our dairy ranches. All this movement complicates the disease control problem. It was obvious that if we ever hoped to control tuberculosis, we would first have to stop the importation of diseased animals. For this reason an ordinance was passed regulating all cattle imported for dairy or breeding purposes. It required all such animals to be brought in under a permit, accompanied by a health certificate showing a satisfactory tuberculosis test and subject to a retest. Right here is where the fun started, for when we began retesting in 1924 we found from 33 to 40 per cent reactors. No one knows what the percentage of reactors was before this date, but it is safe to say that it was no less. With such a flood of reactors and exposed cows to buy from, the dairymen had small chance of maintaining a clean herd.

Compare these figures, please, with the Los Angeles County Live Stock Department's report for the calendar year of 1929, which shows 23,740 cattle retested upon arrival with only 1 1-3 per cent reactors.

A Red Letter Day

April 30, 1930, was a red letter day for the tuberculosis control division. In one mail we received State and private veterinarians' test certificates on twenty-two herds of cattle, comprising 1238 animals, without a single reactor. Since February 1, at which time I became actively interested in this phase of our departmental work, to June 2, we have received all clean certificates from 161 herds of cattle. During April and May we received reports on 180 herds of cattle that have passed a satisfactory tuberculin test. These figures given are merely a cross-section of the year's work, but they serve to give one an idea of the situation at the present time.

We occasionally find tuberculosis still, but we usually discover that it is due to mismanagement, careless buying or allowing old, formerly infected herds to go too long without a test.

On April 1 a new milk ordinance went into effect which requires all cows from which milk is produced and sold in Los Angeles county to have passed a satisfactory tuberculin test. The testing that was conducted during the past year in preparation for this ordinance and which will be continued under its provisions should place Los Angeles county in a very high position, as far as tuberculosis control is concerned.

During the past year we have supervised the cleaning and disinfecting of all dairy sales herds in the county and placed them under regular monthly sanitary inspection. We tried to avoid doing this, as some yard managers thought they were regulated too much as it was, but we found we obtained no results from suggestions and requests for better sanitary conditions. In justice to the dairymen who are buying through the sales yards, we are obligated to see that there is as little danger as possible of cows becoming contaminated while held for sale. Now we find that yard owners are becoming interested in the game and take pride in keeping a clean attractive place. They find it helps business, as the dairymen are becoming more and more particular as to what they buy.

The Follow-Up

We follow up every tuberculin test that is conducted in the county where reactors are found and see that any infected material is removed. Occasionally we have to use considerable persuasion and diplomacy to get this cleaning and disinfecting done, but in the main, we find that cattle owners are only too willing to do the work when the need for it is explained in the right manner.

A part of this work consists in checking herds to see that all reactors are removed. During the last month we have found and forced the removal of twenty-eight old cows from previous test.

Our responsibilities are increasing as more and more herds become tuberculosis-free, for it is only by damming the flood at its source, by holding the lid down on those that would like to dispose of the diseased animals in this county (which is recognized as one of the best dairy cow markets in the world) that our dairymen can hope to keep their herds clean and avoid the heavy losses they have suffered in the past.

You perhaps remember the story of the Dutch boy who, by stopping a leak in the dike, prevented his country from becoming flooded. The veterinarians in this department who are retesting dairy cows as they arrive in the county are preventing as great a menace to the dairy industry by stopping the influx of tuberculosis animals.

This program of eradication has been a co-operative one, carried on quietly by the dairy industry, creameries, practicing veterinarians, State and county forces. Two main objects have been kept in view, the prevention of the economic losses that result from diseased herds, and the production of a better milk supply for the consuming public.

The work that has been done probably holds no parallel in several respects. There has been no disruption of the dairy industry. When faced with a very unfavorable situation, no noisy campaign was inaugurated with resulting threats of a milk famine and milk strikes, such as have occurred in many eastern cities. A carefully planned program was formulated and has been carried through in a very satisfactory manner, in spite of a multitude of obstacles that have presented themselves. The work has spread to adjoining counties so that the entire milk shed of Southern California is rapidly becoming clean, and this program will be continued until the last reacting animal has been found.

The Fat of the Land

Seems to Be Butter Fat in the State of California

A review of California's dairy industry, according to compilations of the State Department of Agriculture, show that the State's "big butter and milk men" produced dairy products in 1929 worth $155,967,025, an increase of $4,334,234 over 1928. The average yield of the California dairy cows increased by almost two pounds of butter fat, raising the total average yield up to 236.9 pounds. The State about maintained its butter consumption at an average per capita of 21.34 pounds. We manufactured 72,805,560 pounds of butter and imported 31,734,644 pounds more. Each inhabitant of California last year ate 6.83 pounds of cheese, drank 27.9 gallons of milk, poured about six quarts of cream over cereal and into his or her coffee.

And that wasn't all. Over 15,000,000 gallons of ice cream was eaten by Californians, an increase of over 9 per cent past the mark in 1928, which amounts to 3.23 gallons per person. The average per capita consumption of cottage cheese amounted to not far from four pounds last year. Buttermilk used for human consumption in 1929 amounted to 4,913,218 gallons. Add to these condensed and evaporated milk, powdered milk and other products of the industry to get a vision of the business.

Normal Movement

The last week of June was one of the record weeks in the California lemon business, with Exchange sales of lemons reaching a total of over 600 cars, according to T. H. Powell, lemons sales manager of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange, which has marketed 90 to 95 per cent of the California crop for many years. "The July 1 estimate showed a total of 5168 cars of lemons on hand and to be picked by Exchange packing-houses to the end of the season, which will give a normal supply for shipment," said Mr. Powell. "During the same period last year Exchange shipments were 4426 cars, while 1928 showed a total of 4858 cars and 1927, 3850. This estimate indicates that Exchange shipments for the next four months will be comparable with average shipments for the past three years."

New World Record

Foundation Cow Makes Good Via Great Grand-daughter

A new world record comes to Southern California. Mechthilde Pontiac Piebe, Pottenger Sanitarium Farm Holstein, has made it out at Monrovia in class B, with an official but not yet announced 22,207.5 pounds of milk and 863.8 pounds of butter fat, with an average test of 3.88 per cent, as a 3-year-old. This record was held by her mother before her with 809 pounds of fat.

This heifer is the great grand-daughter of Mercedes Roderick Mechthilde, foundation cow for the Pottenger herd, who was good enough to produce twenty-four pounds of fat in seven days. The old cow's daughter, Lady Mechthilde Colantha Jewel, produced 773 pounds of fat at four and a half years and was going strong when she died suddenly at the age of six years. Mechthilde Pontiac Segis Lady, next in the line, produced 1005 pounds of fat in 22,092.2 pounds of milk as a senior 4-year-old, making 809 pounds as a 3-year-old in class B. All of these were world's records until Segis Lady's daughter made this new record. Old "Mech" still holds three records and has the distinction of being the only cow on record in the world who has produced over 30,000 pounds of milk and 1000 pounds of fat under maturity.

Mechthilde Ormsby Piebe Pontiac, 2-year-old daughter of Mechthilde Pontiac Piebe, has 225 pounds of fat in her first 105 days on test, which is higher, so far, than her dam produced at the same age.

They Have Troubles

DAIRYMAN'S LOT IS NOT A BED OF ROSES

By Earl Maharg

JOB was a lucky soul. Had he been a dairyman supplying milk to metropolitan Los Angeles, instead of a biblical patriarch, the chances are he would have "cussed" the milk surplus, multiple inspection, cow finance organizations, high replacement costs, bovine tuberculosis, abortion, high feed costs, lack of profit, a dozen other grievances and then "given up the ghost" and been buried as "another good but poor dairyman."

The purity, quality and palatability of the Los Angeles milk supply are unequaled. This high standard of milk has been attained largely by the dairymen's individual and public-spirited effort plus helpful co-operation of highly efficient state, county and city health departments, the assistance of the dairymen's department of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau, the Los Angeles County Live Stock Inspector's office, the California Milk Distributors, the agricultural department of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce and other agencies.

The dairymen, voluntarily and in co-operation with the Los Angeles county live stock inspector, reduced "T. B." to a minimum. The Los Angeles County Farm Bureau then asked the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors to pass a county ordinance forbidding the sale of whole milk to the custom trade unless produced from T. B. free cows.

It was so successful that some of the health officers insisted that the dairymen at once clean up contagious abortion. Now abortion is not a menace to public health but is purely an economic problem. For this reason, the dairymen and the farm bureau insisted that haste be made slowly, giving the dairymen time to recuperate from the financial shock of the other clean-up. This second house cleaning is going on now and in a few years abortion will be eliminated, too—the dairymen again carrying the entire financial load.

Due to the fact that the dairymen will not buy diseased cows and that there is a scarcity of good dairy cows in the western part of the United States, prices of dairy animals for replacement purposes have increased by leaps and bounds. This would not be such a handicap were it not for the fact that while prices of dairy cows are going up, the price of milk is going down.

Inspection of milk by health authorities is necessary, and when properly conducted, an aid to the dairyman and a protection to consumers.

The city health authorities in Los Angeles county are able and efficient. However, the various cities in the Los Angeles metropolitan district do not have a uniform standard of dairy inspection. Neither is the work of the various health officers co-operatively co-ordinated. As a result of this lack of co-ordination there is a large volume of duplicate inspection and a resultant waste of taxpayers' money.

In addition to a waste of public funds, the dairymen are confused by various orders and recommendations made by different health officers, and in attempting to carry out the conflicting orders they oftentimes suffer severe financial loss. The above assertion is conclusively proven by a questionnaire sent by the Los Angeles county Farm Bureau to dairymen and creamerymen.

Health officers or representatives of health departments from nearly all the cities in Los Angeles county appeared before the dairy inspection committee of the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau and decried the lack of co-ordination now existing. These representatives of the various cities stated that by a uniform high standard of inspection and proper co-ordination and co-operation, the evils of duplicate inspection could be solved. However, the Los Angeles City Health Department has as yet refused to co-operate in a plan which would eliminate duplication and as a result the penalization of the dairy continues.

The question of surplus milk has been a real problem.

The farm bureau and other organizations worked out a plan for the shipping of all surplus to a central plant and prorating the loss incurred back to the producer. This plan has been put in successful operation. The surplus is now under control, but the dairyman pays the bill.

There should be no surplus of milk in Los Angeles, especially during a time when the dairymen are losing money. This surplus is largely due to the activities of the cow finance companies and lack of financial judgment on the part of some dairymen.

The cow finance companies are making huge sums in profits, but the dairymen go broke and lose their cows. A banker in the dairy section says that some cows have been repossessed so often that if a truck stops in the yard and the apron is let down the cows walk into the truck.

The question of adverse legislation confronts the dairyman at every session of the State Legislature. Certain health officers and certain distributors seem determined to eliminate raw milk.

The Farm Bureau has in the past and will, with the support of the dairy interests, continue to fight any such legislation which would be ruinous to many dairymen and detrimental to the consumers.

Meet Burbank Pietertje Ormsby Lass, of Wayside Farms on the Ridge Route, and her progeny. Burbank is a heavy milker and a beautiful specimen of Holstein femininity. Her owner is S. F. Fanning.

A Big Holstein Herd

Pure-Breds Furnish Raw Milk for City Folks

As you enter the first defile in the long climb northward over the Ridge Route, off to your right lies Wayside Farms, S. F. Fanning's "raw-milk factory," interesting to the city dweller as one of his sources of sweet flavorsome milk, interesting to the dairyman as one of the very large Southland herds of pure-bred Holstein cattle.

Mr. Fanning is not one of your hit-and-miss dairymen. He believes in herd improvement, and practices it. Formerly he had a dairy farm farther down in San Fernando Valley. He sold out, but once a dairyman, always a dairyman, and the chance to take over the well-known A. M. Dunn herd in the Castaic district last year was too good to pass up.

The chief effort at Wayside Farms is to produce milk of attractive flavor, and this means a careful study of feeding, and an extra effort at sanitation. The Wayside cows are washed before each milking, their udders are disinfected. They are then milked by hand, clean, healthy men being employed at this work. The pedigrees of the Wayside animals read like the peerage list of the Holstein world. Mr. Fanning believes in clinging to type while seeking production. One of his fine herd bulls, Stenzil Sir Armsby Fairmont, a 3-year-old who made an excellent showing on the fair circuit last year, is being fitted now for the Sacramento State Fair.

Some idea of the size of the Wayside Holstein group may be gathered from these figures: Five bulls, 225 milk cows, 180 head now milking, 185 young heifers.

Supply and Demand

By Carl J. Williams

THIS is a period of surplus—just what is the cause, you can ask almost anybody and can get about as many answers as the number of people to whom you put the question. But evidently it is hard to locate the real reason for surplus so we have to "pass the buck" to the two gentlemen, Supply and Demand. We know that this pair aren't working together; either Mr. Supply has become too strong for Mr. Demand and is giving him too much to do, or else Mr. Demand has had a nervous breakdown and is unable to do as much work as he has been doing the past few years.

In certain industries such as the automobile business an adjustment can be made immediately. If Mr. Demand becomes rushed, Mr. Supply can be laid off for a period and told not to work so hard until things change and the two can work together in harmony again.

This adjustment is harder to make in agriculture than in industry, as the cycle of production is longer. The manufacture of cars may be cut down in a day without great loss to the manufacturer, but to stop the production of milk when demand stops is more difficult without great injury to the cow and dairyman.

In the metropolitan areas where the dairy industry is based on a structure of market milk prices, and the price charged for milk in that area is based on the cost of production in that area and not on the price of butter fat that goes into the manufacture of butter, the surplus question is more serious if the amount becomes large.

This situation exists in the Los Angeles market milk shed and has been more or less serious the past few months both to the distributor and the producer. Hundreds of dairymen have gone broke because they could not produce milk at the price they were receiving for it, and many distributors have suffered though unjust competition of a cheap grade of milk sold below cost of distribution and production. In order to correct this coundition an organization of producers was formed to co-operatively handle this surplus milk and turn it into other dairy products than market milk. This company is known as the Co-operative Dairy Products Association, Ltd., and is at present getting settled in its new plant on Albion street, Los Angeles, after operating successfully for over four months in a leased plant in San Bernardino. At the present time this company is handling the surplus milk of 75 per cent of the producers of the Los Angeles area and now with its plant located in Los Angeles expects to increase this amount up to close to 100 per cent.

The milk is separated and the cream is sold to the distributors and the skim milk sold to manufacturers who have use for it, or it is dried and sold to go into dairy and poultry feed mixtures.

While it is impossible to operate this plant at a profit, nevertheless this surplus milk is being salvaged at as little loss to the dairymen as possible. This loss has averaged around 28 cents a pound under the price received for market milk on all fat handled in the plant. This amount, while it might mean ruination to any one dairyman or small group of dairymen, when spread over most of the butter fat produced in the Los Angeles market milk shed, means but a small deduction to each dairyman. The amount deducted varies according to the amount of surplus being handled.

Each creamery in the past, and to a certain extent still, carries surplus milk from 10 to 15 per cent of their volume to take care of the fluctuations in trade. A co-operative by-product plant can handle this milk more cheaply than each individual creamery and can carry it subject to immediate call from the distributor for market milk when the trade demands it.

This by-products company should do a great deal toward stabilizing the milk industry of the Los Angeles district by supplying the distributors with all their needs the year around, regardless of the fluctuations of trade and without the danger of a shortage at one period and the expense of a heavy surplus at another.

This plant is carried as an expense to the producers of the Los Angeles market milk shed and is their guaranty to this great metropolitan area of an unlimited supply of economically produced good clean milk at all times. In other words, Mr. Supply is offering to co-operate with Mr. Demand at all times, regardless of how he feels.

A "Perfect Food"

IF ANY FOOD CAN CLAIM AS MUCH IT'S MILK

By Dr. F. M. Pottenger

WHEN scientists first discovered the presence of vitamines in various food materials, a closer relationship was built up between the physician and the dietitian. The connection between malnutrition and certain ailments was not new to the medical profession, but the knowledge regarding this relation became more widespread and more study has been devoted to it, until today many facts concerning this fascinating field of endeavor have been fixed and are accepted in the use of curative agencies today. Perhaps today as never before are efforts directed toward disease prevention rather than cures of disease already established.

One of the first food products which science definitely fixed as vitamine carrying was milk, and while many other worthy foods have been found to provide them in varying quantities and make them available, milk continues to be one of our best sources for these necessary agencies.

But in our enthusiasm and interest over the various vitamines which have been found to be beneficial for the prevention and cure of certain diseases, we should not forget that other food elements are important also in constructing general resistance to all diseases. Proteins, fats, minerals and certain salts must be provided to the body, particularly of the growing child, and also to the adult, whether in good health or not.

Nature has provided the human race with what has been called a "perfect food." Without quarreling over definitions or quibbling over terms, it may be said that milk comes at least as near that definition as any food we have today. It contains in easily assimilable form all the elements needed for normal growth in the child and pretty well balanced, as well. And we find no other food so suited to the strengthening of the adult system throughout life.

In the treatment of pulmonary ailments we have found milk invaluable, less as a medical agent than as a resistance-building food. It forms a very considerable part of the diet of all our patients and its use has proved so valuable that there is no question in our minds to its place in the dietary. I believe that milk should provide a part of every meal for old and young, sick and well.

Many people believe that they cannot drink milk in its natural form. There may be a few who are so constituted that they cannot. There is an occasional person who cannot eat strawberries. But there are very few such and they merely provide a small field of study for specialists. Most people who really believe milk is harmful to them are mistaken and if it is properly introduced in their diet they will find that instead of harming them, it will prove beneficial. Such a valuable food deserves patient trial before being discarded.

The nature of milk is such that it is, perhaps, more subject to infection than other foods, and efforts have been made to protect milk users from this source of disease by treating the milk itself. Such treatment, while rendering it innocuous from an infection standpoint, destroys some of its virtues and makes it less valuable. I feel that the work of safeguarding this great food product should be directed toward the sources of the milk rather than the milk itself. Much has been done already in that direction—the campaigns for ridding cattle of disease, the programs of sanitation in dairying. This, it seems, is more constructive and valuable for health than the treatment of the milk itself. This view comes from a study and consideration of the industry as a whole, for our own herd, naturally free from disease, is not maintained commercially but only to supply patients with pure raw whole milk.

There is no question as to the value of the certified milk now on the market. It is a most valuable product and worthy of an entrance to any home. For those not able to pay for it, I believe a raw milk prepared under reasonable sanitary rules should be permitted always because of its virtues not attainable in any other manner.

However, many people do not realize how relatively cheap milk is. As compared with other foods or food combinations as assimilable, as nutritious and as regenerative, milk is the cheapest of all. Its value to the health and well-being of the human race is incalculable and anything that supports and advances it is vital to humanity, while anything which lowers its effectiveness or tends to minimize its use is harmful to mankind.

Uncle Ab says it is always too easy to find excuses for neglecting the things he does not want to do.

A "Mist of Milk"

MODERN WAY OF MAKING MILK POWDER

By George E. Platt

NOT so many years ago most dairy farmers were concerned only with the amount of butter fat in milk for, unless they were close enough to a city to supply milk for bottling, it was only the cream which brought them an income. The cream, of course, was separated and sold for churning purposes. The result was a tremendous economic loss to the dairy industry through the wastage of hundreds of thousands of pounds of skim milk daily.

This waste occupied the minds of several leading figures in the dairy industry of the country. A partial remedy came about with the introduction of condensed milk, in which part of the water content of milk was removed by heat and vacuum. Although this made it possible to preserve the milk in cans, it did not remedy the situation.

One of those who was gravely concerned with the problem, both from the standpoint of the dairy farmer and because he realized the food value thus wasting, was C. E. Gray, a milk chemist who had come to California from the United States Department of Agriculture in Washington D. C. and entered the creamery business in Humboldt county.

Mr. Gray reasoned that if the water in milk could be completely removed the residue would contain all of the food elements of milk in a light form, easy to transport and as useful a food as the original product. He began to experiment along these lines and eventually set up an apparatus which consisted simply of a hand atomizer and a tube through which heated air was passed. Into one end he atomized a cup of milk and at the other end found a white powder deposited.

Upon this rough foundation the powdered milk industry in California is built. Of course, the rough apparatus of the early experiments has given way to great retorts through which currents of heated air are driven, and the hand atomizer has been replaced. The milk passes into the retorts at 2500-pounds pressure in the form of a "milk fog." Thirty seconds from the introduction of the fluid milk into the pressure system, the milk solids are being deposited into barrels at the other end of the plant. All that remains is for the barrels to be sealed and shipped to market, which means the entire United States. The baking industry is the largest user of this product.

The development of the powdered milk industry in California by Mr. Gray and his associates has meant much to the dairy industry of California as well as to other States. More powdered skim milk for most of the product thus made is the skim product—is being made every year in this State, reaching a total of perhaps 40,000,000 pounds annually. Other methods have been nearly 150,000,000 pounds made annually in developed but the major portion of the the United States is produced by the process described above.

The economic benefits of the powdered milk industry in California can be realized easily. Great quantities of powdered milk are now being marketed throughout the United States, the money for which finds its way back to the pockets of California dairymen. Since this powdered milk makes use only of the skim portion of the milk, the cream is available for churning into butter, or for sweet cream.

The manufacture of powdered milk is a highly important part of the reason for the stability of California dairying. What was once a waste product is now a highly valuable by-product, valuable not only to the dairyman but likewise to the consumer by way of bread, pastries, candy, ice cream and other food products.

Buttermilk is an excellent summer drink. It has the same food value as skim milk but is more easily digested by some people because the casein is clotted by the acid.

Getting Ready

Fine Holstein Show String Is Being Prepared

SANTA MARIA.—In anticipation of the approaching fair season, Rosemary Farms, established here under the ownership of G. Allan Hancock, is making final preparations for sending a string of its fine Holsteins on tour. The animals have been put in fine condition and when the time comes they will be ready to look and act their prettiest in the ring.

The Rosemary string will be headed by Perfection Jewel Newaukum, the bull which won All American in 1928 and whose growth has justified his high promise two years ago. Many of the females are particularly good in type, and steady gains which they made in performance at the pail have encouraged the management. It expects to build up one of the truly great Holstein farms of the country and great progress in this direction is reported.

Honey, says an authority, is a destroyer of disease germs that afflict the human family, particularly those that cause typhoid fever, dysentery, and various diarrheal affections.

They Have Troubles

DAIRYMAN'S LOT IS NOT A BED OF ROSES

By Earl Maharg

JOB was a lucky soul. Had he been a dairyman supplying milk to metropolitan Los Angeles, instead of a biblical patriarch, the chances are he would have "cussed" the milk surplus, multiple inspection, cow thrance organization, high replacement costs, bovine tuberculosis, abscess, bitch feed costs, lack of profit, a dozen standard of dairy inspection. Neither is the work of the various health officers cooperatively co-ordinated. As a result of this lack of co-ordination there is a large volume of duplicate inspection and a resultant waste of taxpayers' money.

Southdowns grazing on the sward on Rancho La Lomita, at Lockford. These sheep were imported from England by Mr. Bain.

Three grand champion Jersey cows on the lawn at La Lomita, Palms. They are New Woman, Ladine 6th and Eagle Lass, all winners of the highest honors in the show ring. They are producers, too.

THE business of breeding animals has the same relation to dairying as the business of producing nursery stock to fruit growing and the business of developing seed for growing field crops. The dairyman's business is producing milk for the consumer, either whole or in manufactured form. The breeder produces some milk, just in the nature of things, but his success depends on the animals he offers for sale.

The breeders are specialists, selecting blood lines and individuals for their matings with the utmost care and only after long study as to the progeny which they may expect, according to the laws of heredity. A constructive breeder builds up a line of his own in the course of time, and its performance is, in a measure, fixed, so that purchasers may reasonably look for certain returns from the animals they buy.

One of these breeders is Ferdinand R. Bain, a wealthy man who loves the Jersey breed and who has devoted a great deal of his time and attention to the advancement of his chosen cattle on the Pacific Slope. Mr. Bain has two farms, each named Rancho La Lomita, one at Palms, not far from Santa Monica, and the other at Lockeford in San Joaquin Valley. Mr. Bain isn't a hobbyist, interested solely in producing Jerseys that can win on the circuit, although he has shown many strings and won sheaves of blue and purple ribbons at fairs and shows, big and little, all over the country. No, he is more interested in producing Jerseys which unite utility with beauty, rightly assuming that, in the final analysis, true beauty is utility, and that there isn't a point in conformation that doesn't mean something of value.

For fifty years Mr. Bain has been breeding Jerseys and has in that time built up a constructive program of breeding foundation stock. The effects of his work will be felt in the dairy herds of the West for many years to come.

The original Jersey foundation used by him was a combination of rich St. Lambert and Pogis blood, and later he introduced that of the Majestys, followed by strains of other celebrated bulls imported from the island of Jersey, the You'll Do Volunteer lines predominating. The outstanding individual in his herd today is Wonderful Volunteer, a remarkably prepotent son of You'll Do Volunteer. This is his senior herd sire and is one of the greatest bulls ever imported from the island. His get have been consistent show winners in Jersey and the United States, and his producing daughters are making gold and silver medals for production at the two ranchos right along.

The female foundation of the herd is composed largely of gold and silver medal cows, all with remarkable type—the sort that is popular among both dairymen and show men. Mr. Bain's Jersey matrons are fed and cared for on a practical everyday working basis, under natural conditions. His entire establishment is under both Federal and State supervision, for if there is one thing Mr. Bain is particular about it is the health of his animals. He has no tuberculosis-infected animals and all of them are regularly subjected to the agglutination test.

Following along the lines of breeding which he has fixed on, he is seeking to improve what he has by judicious blending of blood, and his records show that the patient, constant work he has conducted is bringing rich fruit, not only for himself, but for the herds into which his Jersey blood strains are being introduced.

Mr. Bain is deeply interested in the methods of the great breeders of other lands. He has attended the parish fairs of England, where breeders of some particular breed gather and pit individual animals against each other. Near Stratford on Avon, for instance, Southdown men have held an annual sheep show for centuries. From these small units the best go to the greater fairs and shows.

He has been so impressed by the improvement in breeding accomplished by these small shows that he is fostering a similar movement in California, encouraging in a very substantial way a Jersey show in San Joaquin Valley this year.

He isn't content with Jerseys alone. All his life he has been concerned with livestock, with harness horses, with beef cattle, with Jerseys. Now he has taken up Southdowns, importing a breeding herd from England. These are headed by a ram which was made champion at the International in Chicago, and elsewhere. He also has a notable herd of Duroc-Jersey swine headed by a grand champion boar.

Mr. Bain is not the only constructive breeder, by any means, but he is one of those who have done much toward lifting the standards of production and toward lifting the industry to a higher level than it has occupied heretofore.

BIGGEST OF 'EM ALL

These requirements might be considered as being somewhat of an ideal, and while it may not be possible for a dairyman to provide an ideal ration at all times, it is possible for him to approach such ideal conditions.

Studies of costs of various types of feeds, together with consideration of digestible nutriments which these various feeds furnish, indicate that for the most part the cheapest feeds are those which may be raised by the dairy farmer himself. These would ordinarily be hay, silage and certain pasture or soilage crops. These feeds would for the most part meet the requirements satisfactorily. They are usually palatable; provide ample succulence if fed properly; may be used in such a way as to give some variety; may be used to give proper balance; all are bulky, and are usually the most economical feeds available.

Too many dairymen have been depending upon one type of feed. It is probably safe to say that there are many cows in the State which do not know that there is any feed except alfalfa. We are fortunate in being able to grow this excellent dairy feed, but usually we find that production can be increased by the addition of some other type. We can improve variety and balance by the addition of some type of carbohydrate, such as silage or sudan grass pasture, fed with alfalfa hay. The selection of feeds to be grown depends primarily on local climatic conditions. Information regarding these should be secured from the experience of those who have grown various feeds in the respective communities. It is well to select feeds which will give ample tonnage as well as variety and balance.

The feeding of concentrates to dairy cows is becoming increasingly important in California as our dairy cows are increasing in producing ability rather rapidly. It is impossible for a high producing cow to eat enough of bulky feeds, such as hay and silage, to provide her with all of the nutrients which she needs for continued high milk and fat production. Such a cow requires additional feed in the form of concentrates. Concentrates are usually high in price and so should be fed with a great deal of care. This does not mean that cows should be fed too scantily, but that concentrates should be fed only to cows which indicate ability to use these additional feeds efficiently. Under normal conditions it is safe to say that cows should be given all the feed which they can use efficiently, as indicated by their production.

Concentrate feeds should be selected, first, on the basis of the need for balance in the dairy ration. This can be determined only by considering the type of roughage the cows are receiving. If all roughage given is high in protein, then none of the high protein feeds need be given in the form of con-

Your Dairy Cows Must Have Minerals

Because a Good Dairy Cow Is a Regular Manufacturing Plant—Each Year Producing 15,000 lbs. of Milk and a Calf

The mineral demands of a milch cow are very great because in addition to building a strong skeleton structure and maintaining her own body requirements, she must produce milk and a calf, both of which contain large amounts of minerals. Fifteen thousand pounds of milk contain 100 pounds of mineral. The usual ration for dairy cows do not contain enough minerals to meet these demands.

2. In many cases, immediately increase milk flow.
3. Lengthen breeding life of cow.
4. Prevent abortion and sterility caused by lack of minerals.
5. Help cows to clean better at calving time.
6. Help reduce scours in calves.
7. Build up cow's resistance to disease.
8. Improve digestive functions.
9. Help cows to produce larger and stronger calves.

A "Perfect Food"

IF ANY FOOD CAN CLAIM AS MUCH IT'S MILK

By Dr. F. M. Pottenger

WHEN scientists first discovered the presence of vitamines in various food materials, a closer relationship was built up between the physician and the dietitian. The connection between malnutrition and certain ailments was not new to the medical profession, but the knowledge that many of the ailments could be traced to the absence of certain vitamines in the food was a distinct step forward in the science of nutrition.

Milk was found to be the most nearly perfect food of all the foods. It contained all of the vitamines known to be necessary for the growth and health of the human body. It contained them in the right proportion. It contained them in a form that was easily assimilated. Science says, "the average growing child requires the amount of calcium content in one quart of milk per day; also the average adult should have at least one pint per day."

Calcium is in that part of the milk that we see below what we usually designate as the "cream line" in the milk bottle. Cream is that part of the milk which contains the fat, and, being lighter than the milk, rises to the top. It also gives the milk its rich pleasant flavor, and we are all prone to complain if the milk does not contain a large amount of cream.

Cream is, of course, valuable for health, growth and energy, but the skim milk contains the calcium which builds the framework of the body and protein and other constituents that build tissue and make good blood.

It should be remembered, also, that children and adults as well should have along with this food plenty of fresh fruits daily, leafy vegetables, together with such meats and starchy foods as are necessary to balance the diet. The principal thing to remember is, first, to eat such foods as we should for our best health and growth, and after we have done that, we may please our appetite by indulging in such foods as we may like the taste of.

One of the good foods we like to eat, one that affords proper nourishment for the few that feel they cannot drink milk, is to eat ice cream, which contains all the elements of milk and will supply all that one needs for good health, if one eats enough. Or this may be supplemented with custards made from milk and eggs, or junket, which all children like.

Cheese made from whole milk also supplies all the elements needed by the human body, and is a protein food with, perhaps, the least waste of all. It is the cheapest source of protein. There are a thousand ways to use cheese in combination dishes and all of them are good.

Cottage cheese with fruits is one of the most wholesome combinations to be found, and contains everything the human body requires for health and growth in so far as food goes.

The milk man is your best friend. He is the man that always comes every day, rain or shine; he is the one and only daily visitor. Whithout him life would not be complete. Somewhere out in the quiet country a kindly old cow is working day and night, awake or asleep, to produce the life-giving fluids for us.

She's Been a Friend

DAIRY COW HAS NEVER FAILED US YET

By Jay Dutter

THE earliest recorded history has shown that the life and activities of man have been closely associated with the cow. Modern science has proven beyond question of a doubt, that the human race is dependent upon the milk of the cow for its very life; and as the human race has increased in numbers, and humanity became crowded into great cities, man was obliged to produce milk in great quantities to supply the inhabitants with this necessary food.

Milk, because of its physical make-up, is very susceptible of contamination, therefore, it was necessary to invent machinery with which to process and handle it in order to protect it. Recognizing this, men of science have invented machinery that makes it possible to handle milk from the cow to the customer, without its coming in contact with human hands or with anything else that could possibly impair its purity, much less injure its food value.

The modern dairy industry, realizing its responsibility to the public, and as purveyers of this fundamental food, has joined with health officials through the agency of its Dairy Council, to set up self-regulatory laws with high standards of production; these laws to be enforced through a State bureau created for that purpose. Also, through its Dairy Council it has created an educational fund for the purpose of broadcasting through the schools a knowledge of the proper selection of foods and of health habits for both children and adults.

Scientists say, "protein compounds are necessary for the formation of the body tissue and fluids and may also serve as body fuel. The principal protein compound in milk is casein. Another important one is called lact-albumin, but this is present in much smaller quantities. All forms of protein nitrogen and all are made up of substances known as amino acids. The combination of amino acids found in the proteins of milk, eggs, meat and other flesh foods is very like some of those in the human body and are of special value for tissue building, and are called adequate, or complete, proteins, and milk and the other materials that furnish them are sometimes grouped together as efficient-protein foods."

Milk is always, or nearly always, sold on the value of its fat content. Commerce usually bases its value on the amount of butter fat contatined in the milk, because from this butter fat is made our butter. Cheese usually contains all of the fat in milk. Fat is classed as an energy food, although science tells us that butter fat is rich in vitamin A, which is very necessary for healthy child growth. In a Jewish orphanage in the State of New York, some years ago an experiment was conducted in the feeding of a group of seven children whose average age was eleven years. They were fed a uniform diet, except that butter was fed to them for a period of six months, after which butter was replaced by a substitute for a period of six months and then, or the third six months, butter was again given. The average gain for the first six months was 6.32 pounds. During the second six-months period there was an average loss of 1.35 pounds, but with butter added the third six months period, there was a gain of 8.12 pounds.

The function of food is to promote growth and health and to produce heat and energy. Butter supplied to the diet promotes health and growth, and also heat and energy. No child should be denied his right to grow normally and to maintain good health. If the child has this it will have plenty of energy.

A child to grow normally must have a supply of calcium for building the teeth and bones, for without a strong framework, the body cannot be strong and healthy. Science again tells us that, "while there are a number of sources of calcium, one of the greatest is leafy vegetables; these also supply us with roughage which is essential to our well-being." However, our physical construction makes it impossible to consume enough food of this nature to supply our bodies with the necessary amount of calcium. The only other food we can look to for an adequate supply of this necessary element is milk. The protein content of milk is largely composed of calcium and in

Ontario Breeder Erects Statue to High Producing Jersey

Imperial Isobel, a remarkably fine Jersey cow owned by Harry H. Cook of Ontario, is now perpetuated in sculpture in front of the O. U. Creamery in that city.

Isobel is the first Jersey cow in California to make over 1000 pounds of butter fat in a year. Her record is 1045 pounds of fat and 18,708 pounds of milk in 365 days. So pleased was Mr. Cook that he secured the services of a sculptor for the job and the statue was unveiled on July 12, with fitting ceremonies. The statue is life-size and Isobel isn't a small cow for the breed.

Mr. Cook stated that the ceremony was arranged in appreciation of a successful year in the business of breeding and dairying and as a token of his respect and affection for a noble animal.

It's Still Growing

It takes about 6,000,000,000 pounds of milk every year to satisfy the appetites of people in the United States for ice cream, according to O. E. Reed, chief of the bureau of dairy industry, United States Department of Agriculture. There are, he says, about 4000 ice cream factories, and in 1928 these made about 348,000,000 gallons of ice cream, from the milk of 1,330,000 cows. This ice cream requires 243,000,000 pounds of sugar and 5,000,000 pounds of food gelatin. Ice cream used almost as much milk as cheese and more than evaporated and condensed milk.

Ice cream is an American institution. The first newspaper advertisement offering ice cream for sale appeared in the New York Gazette May 19, 1777. It is variously reported that Dolly Madison, first lady when James Madison was President, and Mrs. Alexander Hamilton, wife of our famous early financier, first served ice cream.

Whoever started it, ice cream making has become a great industry. In 1905 the per-capita consumption was 1.04 gallons in the United States; in 1928 it had increased to 2.9 gallons. The per capita consumption was greatest in Pennsylvania, where it was 4.98 gallons, but California came second with 4.57 gallons per person, and consumption is increasing.

Ice cream is no longer looked on as a luxury, but is generally regarded as a wholesome and nourishing food. Each State has passed laws defining ice cream and setting standards which require manufacture to make a wholesome product of high quality.

From the standpoint of the dairyman, ice cream is peculiarly valuable, for three-fourths of the year's production comes from April 1 to September 30, so its greatest production is during and immediately following the heaviest period of milk production and so helps maintain prices during the summer months, having a particularly important economic place in the industry.

Beetles Distributed

Ten million ladybird beetles have been distributed in Los Angeles county citrus orchards during the past few months, the two county insectaries, one at Downey, the other at Rivera, furnishing these enemies of the mealy bug. Agricultural Commissioner Harold J. Ryan reports a generally light infestation of the pest this season, permitting the rapid and complete coverage of all recorded areas of infestation. About 500 acres showed more mealy bugs than the average, and these groves were covered a second time. Properties on which the beetles were planted totaled 1577, the acreage being 13,725.

Why the Holstein?

WHERE BLACK-AND-WHITE FITS INTO PLAN

By William H. Harriman

[The writer has for years been identified by breeders with the Los Angeles County Farm Holstein herd which, under his direction, has been built up into high production and freedom from disease. Opinions may differ, but everybody is willing to let a man express his preferences and state his reasons. Three great breeds are presented on this page, with articles from three authorities.]

SPECIALIZED dairying in the United States is a comparatively new branch of agriculture, dependent on the recent rapid growth of our cities, which furnishes a large and expanding market for dairy products. As a result, the dairy business has been making a rapid growth, and today the farm market value of dairy products is greater than that of any other agricultural commodity. The value of dairy products produced in one year is greater than that of all the gold and silver mined in the United States during the past twenty years. The dairy products of California are valued at more than twice as much as our well-advertised citrus crop.

The human population of the United States is increasing at the rate of approximately 4000 a day; that is, we will have 4000 more mouths to feed tomorrow than we have today, and most of this increase is localized in the large cities, therefore dependent on the commercial dairy. The dairy cow population is not increasing in the same ratio as is the human population. It is estimated that there are fewer dairy cows than there were five years ago. However, due to better breeding and feeding and to the weeding out of some of the lower producers, the cows that are milked today are producing more milk than those milked five years ago.

On February 4, 1930, the two millionth Holstein was registered. This has been an increase of one million in eight and a half years. Approximately 60 per cent of all registered dairy cattle in the country are Holsteins.

The main consideration on which I base my preference for Holstein cattle is the higher productivity, as Holstein-Friesian cattle hold practically all the records for total butter fat produced in a year, as well as total milk. The world record for butter fat produced is now held by the Holstein-Freisian cow, De Kol Plus Segis Dixie. In 365 days she produced 1349.31 pounds of butter fat in 33,464.7 pounds of milk. In the United States there are 185 cows which have produced more than 1000 pounds of butter fat, and of that number 148, of 80 per cent, are Holsteins. The six highest butter-fat-record cows in the United States are Holsteins. All of the world records for the production of butter fat in the various ages and classes are held by Holsteins, with the exception of the junior 4-year-old class.

Holstein milk produced under proper conditions is most palatable, easily assimilated and nourishing. A higher proportion of fat is not desirable for market milk, because the higher the fat content, the more difficult it is to digest. The small fat particles in Holstein milk give many times the surface per unit volume for the attack of the digestive juices, which makes it far more easily digested by sick people and infants than milk with a higher fat content. It is estimated that 75 per cent of the market consumed in the United States, and approximately 70 per cent of the national supply for all purposes, is produced by the cows carrying Holstein-Friesian blood. The breed's increase in popularity is further evidenced by the work of cow-testing associations. Their records indicate that where pure-bred Holstein sires have been used upon nondescript cows, the progeny shows a marked increase in production accentuated with each succeeding cross of Holstein-Friesian influence. The advance in the possibilities of production increases is again evidenced by the fact that a few years ago it seemed an impossibility to obtain 100 pounds of milk from a cow in one day; whereas, we now have reached the mark where a representative of the Holstein-Friesian breed has averaged over 100 pounds a day for the entire year. Milk from Holstein cows compares favorably with human milk in percentage of butter fat and in the physical and chemical characteristics of the curd which account, in part, for its superior merits in infant feeding. It is a superior milk for infants, children, adults and invalids. The average Holstein milk contains from 3.4 to 3.6 per cent butter fat with milk sugar 4.65 per cent, protein 3.15 per cent and ash (lime and other minerals) .70 per cent.

Holstein cattle are strong and sturdy, and because of this and the feature just discussed regarding the ease of digestibility of Holstein-Friesian milk, they have a low percentage of mortality among the calves. Holstein calves are the largest of the dairy breeds at birth. Holsteins consume great quantities of roughage. This is one of the reasons why this breed of cattle can make such great net returns, because of their ability to consume and utilize larger amounts of the cheaper feeds. In important tests, Holstein cattle have proved to be the most economical producers of milk and butter fat.

An additional advantage of the Holstein is the carcass value when no longer profitable as a milker. The average man in buying cows will get a few that are unprofitable; then, too, in any herd cows are becoming unprofitable each year because of failure to breed, and various other accidents. Owing to the Holsteins' great size they bring more money when sold to the butcher. We recover from $120 to $150 a cow when the cattle become unprofitable to keep as dairy producers. We have sold bulls to butchers for as high as $185. Approximately one-half of the beef used at the Los Angeles County Farm is produced in our own dairy herd, and it is of excellent quality.

The Holstein-Friesian breed has proved itself to be adaptable to any climate or region of America. The breed is widely distributed in practically every section of the United States. Almost at the same time we find records being made on the extreme western coast and in the Atlantic region. We find Holsteins thriving in the intermountain sections of the country, in the extreme northern parts of the United States, and in the southern part of Canada. It is rapidly becoming an important breed in the wheat and corn belt sections, and in every case has proved its ability to produce under very adverse conditions. The Holstein is also gaining a great deal of popularity in the South and is taking its place in the southern plan of agricultural development. It has been demonstrated that wherever the Holstein goes it produces profitably.

About 85 per cent of all public institutions in the country that maintain dairy herds are using Holsteins, including State institution departments of such great dairy States as Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa. These institutions know that among Holstein calves losses are rare, and every well-bred calf develops into a valuable cow, and that because of their constitutional vitality, tuberculosis and other diseases may be held at a minimum. Pure-bred Holstein cattle today offer the greatest opportunity to every public institution, individual or organization that attempts to produce milk in a scientific manner.

Holsteins, backed by 2000 years of breeding for size, ruggedness and production, are famous for their ability to transmit these qualities to their offspring. A question that is frequently being asked is: "Can a good herd be produced from a foundation of common cows by the introduction of a pure-bred sire?" A few poor cows may do little permanent harm to the dairy herd, but a poor sire will do untold damage. It is the common experience of all dairymen who have used a really good improved dairy sire that the investment has made them royal returns. After eight years of thorough research the Iowa State College reports:

"The average of all the records made by first-generation heifers, sired by a pure-bred Holstein sire, shows an increase of 2314.5 pounds of milk, of 71 per cent in milk, and 67.15 pounds of fat, or 42 per cent in fat, at an average age of three and one-half years over the record of their scrub dams at an average of six years."

The country, and indeed the whole world, needs more and more of the highly nutritious food produced by the dairy cow. It is the burden today of every owner of cows to endeavor to raise the production of his dairy herd. The cost of a well-bred Holstein bull is within the reach of every intelligent farmer. The improved sire is without question the most economical investment in any dairy herd.

Saving the Bottles

State supervised milk bottle exchanges maintained by the dairy industry last year handled containers valued at $3,000,000, and have increased the milk bottle's average span of life six times, George H. Hecke, director of the State Department of Agriculture, recently reported. Nowadays "orphan" bottles are sent to the exchange and routed back to the dairy to which they belong. Still thousands of dollars worth of bottles are lost annually, due to the failure of customers to set the empties out for the milkman to pick up. In one city alone, Mr. Hecke estimated, 165,000 bottles are sent to the garbage dump every month, representing an annual loss of $120,000. The average life of a bottle prior to the establishment of the exchange was seven trips. Now it is forty. Last year the State's ten exchanges handled 13,000,000 milk bottles, 40,000 milk cans, 54,000 bottle cases, and several thousand other containers.

BREEDER TELLS WHY

By Harry

[The author of this appreciation to the Jersey breed is a man who has made a success as a breeder of them. He bought his foundation stock with borrowed money, and his Jerseys have paid for his farm, built his home and educated his children, so it isn't surprising that he believes in them.]

EVERY lover of live stock looks for those qualities in a breed for his own use which correspond to the needs and desires of mankind. These requirements are met in the dairy world by the Jersey, in which animal are combined to a superlative degree both utility and beauty. Any breed of live stock that possesses the combination of such characteristics is fundamentally sound for the building of an industry that will live on.

If you want to win a horse race, it would be folly to select a draft horse or a coach horse to run for you. No, you would choose the highest type of animal bred for the race track, with endurance and speed. This method is just as applicable in the selection of a dairy breed. There are older historical records found of the Jersey than of any other dairy breed. The origin of the Jersey cow, in its native home, the Island of Jersey, so far as the exact period when its development began, can be determined only relatively and is drawn from surmise and tradition, but it is highly probable that this great breed had its beginnings some time in the eleventh century. For hundreds of years, Jersey cows have been bred and improved on this little island in the channel between England and France.

These islanders have made a scientific study of proper mating and selection of animals for breeding purposes, and they have made what might seem an almost uncanny use of the laws of heredity. They are shrewd and they have been wideawake about their market. The world is the mart for the sales of their cattle. What they have done entitles them to great credit, for they are true masters of their craft and they have given us an ideal dairy cow—the finest material for the foundation for the dairy industry that can be found.

Just to show how jealously the purity of Jersey blood has been guarded by the men who have produced and maintained the breed: As far back as 1763, before the Revolutionary War was fought, the people of the Island of Jersey passed a law prohibiting the importation of any foreign cattle, except for the purpose of immediate slaughter. These laws were strengthened somewhat in 1789. No Jersey cow or bull which has once left the island can ever return. In fact, for the last twenty-five years no live cattle of any breed or description have been allowed to land on its rocky shores.

The Island of Jersey is but five and one-half by eleven miles in dimension, yet it supports over 10,000 Jersey cattle. Under the drastic system of rules in force there, the breeders have constantly developed the material which they have worked for constantly and they have not reached their goal yet. They have improved both type and production. Today the Jersey is known and increasingly popular in all parts of the world, and a more splendid future awaits it.

This is due to the qualities of both the animals and its product. Jersey milk is of the very highest quality. The outstanding characteristics of the breed are early maturity, longevity, economy and high quality of milk with a high butter-fat content, together with the most refined type of conformation, this latter characteristic having become the virtual standard of type for all dairy breeds.

Beauty, utility, economy and the peculiar ability to adapt herself to all climates has sold the Jersey to the world.

We love to portray the Jersey cow in our minds, for she is a thing of beauty, a picture of comfort and contentment, worthy of any man's best efforts and richly repaying all the care she is given. She is the highest achievement of the breeder's art.

centrates. If there is a balance between the protein and carbohydrate feeds in the roughage, then it is desirable to give a reasonable amount of high protein feed in the concentrate mixture. If all roughage given is of a carbohydrate nature, or, in other words, low in protein, then an additional amount of protein should be given in the concentrate mixture to make up this deficiency. Concentrates should be selected also on the basis of the cost of digestible nutrients which they furnish, rather than the price per ton alone.

Possibly the most important point in the feeding of concentrates economically is feeding according to production. This cannot be done satisfactorily by guesswork. To do this effectively it is necessary to know the production of each cow and to adjust the amount of concentrates given her accordingly.

Probably the greatest criticism of concentrate feeding has been on the basis of its high cost when fed to good and poor cows alike, and also due to the fact that increased concentrate feeding usually does not show sufficiently increased returns the following day or the following week after the feed is given. It is not unusual for dairymen to report that they see the results of concentrate feeding the second year when the cows fed grain through one lactation period again freshen. The successful use of concentrates depends upon their being fed according to the producing ability of the cow over a period of months or years.

Since feed cost is the biggest single item, being from 50 to 70 per cent of the total cost of producing milk and butter fat, it is worth the increased attention of dairymen throughout the State.

Why the Guernsey?

PECULIAR ADVANTAGES OF BREED RELATED

By Horace Addis

[The author of this article is a lover and a judge of all dairy cattle, and comparatively few can write more interestingly about them. He has spent many years among the dairy herds of the Northwest, is a judge of no mean ability and can speak with equal fervor about the Jersey or the Holstein, no doubt. However, he does know the place in dairying into which each breed fits—none better.]

THERE is no disputing about tastes, according to an old saying, and the same goes for breeds of cattle. Some people prefer one, some another, and that is their right and privilege. But no breed endures in favor for many years unless there are good reasons for its permanency. Any breed which becomes and stays popular with great numbers of people has merit.

In speaking of the three great breeds of dairy cattle, each one has its place in the dairy industry or it would soon decline. None of the three show the least sign of losing favor, each is growing stronger, and so one may look for high economic reasons in each, with every confidence of finding them.

The Guernsey originated (as did the Jersey) on an island in the English Channel. Probably at first the breeds were the same, but different treatment by early breeders has brought a marked difference in some particulars between them. As a rule, the Guernsey is larger, its color is frequently, but not invariably, lighter and there are other characteristics which distinguish it from its cousin, the Jersey.

The particular points which the Guernsey breeder claims for his chosen breed are worth considering, for they are what has multiplied the breed over the world and made it more and more popular in the United States.

The Guernsey is gentle. This serenity of temperament is not confined to the cows, by any means; the bulls are easy to handle and more docile than most bulls of other breeds. Individuals differ, of course, but gentleness is a Guernsey characteristic and any dairyman knows its value in handling animals.

The Guernsey is an economic producer, and in these days of business farming, that is an item to be considered. Not always the greatest producer is the best paying producer. Profitable production depends on the balance between cost and gross profit, and the Guernseyman claims, with proof to back his assertion, that the Guernsey cow is economical in her cost as compared with what she produces for her owner.

She is a beautiful animal. This is not, perhaps, quite as important as the other items in her favor, but it is worth something.

Finally, and greatest asset of all, the Guernsey milk is yellower, more golden in color, than the milk of any other breed. Guernsey milk is rich and it is so highly colored that it meets with particular favor from the consumer. It follows that Guernsey milk is market milk par excellence. Naturally, Guernsey dairymen market their milk whole, and generally at a premium, because the milk is so rich both in actual butter-fat content and in appearance. The flavor of Guernsey milk is peculiarly rich and nutty. In short, it makes its own market.

The patrons of the Guernsey herds are found among the rich. They can afford to pay a premium for a fine product! But, because of her economic qualities, Guernsey milk can be produced as cheaply as that of most other breeds. Without detracting from the good qualities of the others, in the least, the Guernsey has claims on the dairy industry which will perpetuate the breed and result in a steady growth in numbers and importance.

The Embarrassments of Thrift

By Alma Whitaker

THRIFT, you understand, is a virtue. And therefore, frequently, it's own reward. Which isn't quite fair . . . – all thrifty people ought to be rich.

But as a matter of fact, we thrifty souls are not thrifty from entirely sacrificial and self-denying motives. It's born in us and we take an unholy pride in it. We couldn't be wasteful flaunting extravagant queens if we wanted to. We are the "penny wise and dollar foolish" brigade, to a very large extent. We spoil the ship for a ha'p'orth of tar quite alarmingly often, too, and our thrift can sometimes prove very costly. We would be utterly wasted as millionaires, for a very important part of being a millionaire is knowing how to spend.

Still, the Lord must approve of thrifty souls, the genuine breed, because He is at considerable pains to keep us under the necessity of being thrifty.

Whenever my thrift has brought my finances to a point where I feel it might be rather jolly to experiment in the flaunting extravagant queen role, something happens to jolt me right back into thrift. I have a genius for saving a nice lump sum and then losing it in a perfectly legitimate respectable manner. It is then that I realize I am required to continue exercising my thrifty virtue. It wouldn't suit my type to be rich . . . it would make me too disgustingly vain of my thrifty achievements.

So I continue blithely wearing my mistakes . . . and don't you ever suppose I don't know they are mistakes. I continue to make the family do without things until we can save up and buy cheap for cash, thus saving interest payments . . . and then losing the saved interest payments buying bum stock, or, at best, more sartorial mistakes, because of my passion for dubious bargains.

It requires so much superior gumption to be successfully thrifty and I am evidently inadequately equipped. I get all confused, because there is a vague subconscious idea in my mind that if I'm thrifty I can afford to be generous . . . and one spasm of generosity can ruin six months of thrift.

For instance, that rich confrere of mine, who is said to be the highest paid woman writer. She invited a bunch of us to her elaborate and regal apartment, with the idea of discussing the formation of a club. She also used the occasion to give a bridal shower to a famous actress . . . so we all took presents. She did us extremely well and we all thanked our gracious hostess when we left. And the next day she collected $3 a head from us to pay for the party . . . since of course, we must have understood it would be a Dutch-treat affair. Not a one of us demurred at the sudden transition to paying guests.

Now you see, when I give that sort of a party, in a very modest house of my own, I have the paltry idea that I must serve inexpensive fare and keep the affair well within what I can afford to pay for myself. It lacks style, naturally. I cut no social ice at all. Yet that rich hostess of ours is actually the thriftier soul . . . in a large, stylish expensive way. She knows a trick worth six of mine. And she obviously has no financial vanity. Thrifty as I am I would be too vain to charge a guest for my hospitality.

I wouldn't be surprised if she scorns to collect trading stamps and coupons. At our house we are most punctilious about getting our bankies and green stamps, and collecting on them when we have a book full. There is a brand of butter that has alphabet coupons enlcosed. When one gets enough of the right letters to form "None Nicer" we can secure various gorgeous aluminum cooking utensils. We have been earnestly collecting 'em for a couple of years now and have every letter but the "i" for "nicer." So naturally we are eager to buy extra pounds of butter in the fond hope that an "i" awaits us in the next package. No matter what else we are ordering, we say "Oh, and we may as well order another pound of butter. We really must get that 'i'." So then, having heaps of butter in the house, we are naturally extravagant with it, because, oh, dear, it will spoil if we don't use it.

And this, mind you, happening to a woman who never had butter and jam on the same slice of bread in her girlhood, except on birthdays and extra stylish occasions. It's very confusing, and yet my thrifty soul will be utterly wretched if we don't get that "i" pretty soon. Drat it, that aluminum roaster will cost us $50 before we're through. Wisdom points to the idea that it would be infinitely more economical to burn the coupons, let up a bit on the butter, and pay cash for the roaster. Especially as our old roaster lacks so much in the way of perfection . . . it's ruined so many roasts to date. Oh, say, will any of you come to a party at my house and pay $3 per, if I let those dashed coupons go hang?

That same thrifty obsession of mine ruins my social standing so often. Picture me lunching at the Biltmore with a stylish hostess, who orders orchids and gold tablecloths and expensive favors when she gives a party . . . and then passing a nice cheap market on the way back to the office, finding the lure of good peas at 5 cents a pound, and strawberries at two for fifteen, buying a 5-cent shopping bag, and lugging it full all up Broadway . . . and meeting the most influential nabobs I know on the way. I probably saved all of 40 cents on the purchases and lost several thousand dollars worth of social prestige.

I have never been able to satisfy myself as to whether it is thriftier to buy cheap socks and stockings and throw 'em away when they get holey, or to pay a good price and darn 'em. You know how it is. One just hates to have a darn show, even in an expensive stocking. On the other hand, what with women having such an eye for quality, it takes a certain amount of aplomb to wear cheap ones. On the other hand, the darning takes time, and nowadays business women feel their time is as valuable as a man's. We are not like those home-keeping dames who spend three months making a dolly that will sell at the church bazaar for 50 cents.

But for that matter, my thrifty soul won't even let me throw the cheap ones away. My present thrifty system is to have half a dozen of the three for a dollar kind, and a couple of the $2.50 kind for superior social occasions. Both get holey just as quickly. The call of the darn is equally insistent with both kinds. In the end I darn 'em all, using up time in which I might be writing $25,000 stories . . . (I mean if I ever did write $25,000 stories, I know it would be in the time I am putting in on the darning.) But there you are . . . the darning making me feel thrice as virtuous as any old $25,000 story possibly could. The former keeps me "worthy" . . . Heaven alone knows what the $25,000 would do to my soul. And anyway, some bright young stock salesman would get it in the end, the day Wall Street decides to have a panic. Oh, this stocking question is very debatable.

Because, you see, the men of my family find my virtuous darning a little trying to live with and to wear. They are forever urging me to "throw 'em away." My rewards are very dubious. Especially as I have never successfully convinced them that my darning bought the new car. Somebody ought to write a book on the correct way to be thrifty.

It took me a long time to decide that good silk underwear was more thrifty than nainsook. The day I came to that decision was when I was run over by a motor bike on the lawn of the Ebell Club. However, I found that one can wash the silk kind at home so easily . . . it only takes an hour or so out of one's writing time . . . Eh? Oh, drat it, there you are again.

The truth is that some of us think cheap and some rich. It takes a rich person to be successfully thrifty . . . with nice rich ideas. My nice middle-class English family didn't do me so good a turn when they raised me thrifty, with a cheap complex. All I ever seem to be able to do is to save five cents and waste five dollars.

Impotence

O Lord, for succor in my strife, I pray.
Help me to overcome this galling blight
That stems the tide of my emotion's sway,
With clouds that darken inspirations' light.
Cast off the shackles from my harried brain,
That hold me frenzied as I vainly grope
To free my fancies from this galling chain,
That makes me mute, incapable to cope
With this foul fiend that invalids my soul,
And plants the noxious venom in my mind;
That renders void the dreams I can't control,
For they fade out to leave me vision blind.
Wipe out this opaque veil, so basely pressed,
To hide the blossoms of my mood's intent,
And leave me impotent, by passion stressed,
To curse this devil dust by Satan sent.

CARE OF THE BODY

gogues—violent, vicious drugs which force menstrual contraction.

Others take treatments of all sorts because the menses are irregular, improperly timed or of subnormal duration.

Then when we deal with the care during menstruation, we find all sorts of ignorance as well.

We are told that if one washes the hands in cold water, the flow will stop. Others are told that the underwear must not be changed until the flow has ceased—that one must sleep alone—that one must fast or feast—that one must be bedridden or take vigorous exercises.

That there is much quackery and knavery in this field is well known.

The medical and drugless boards make the advertisement of curing suppressed menses a crime punishable by loss of license. There is some justification in this attitude, for the exploitation is so vicious as to merit it. It is but one step to the field of criminal abortion—also a crime punishable not only by the licensing board but also by the State laws.

To answer the writer's questions—undoubtedly there are plenty of cases on record where a sharp chill, fright or weakness was responsible for the cessation of menses for an indefinite period. But we cannot establish an arbitrary rule, saying that such causes will always produce such effects.

On the other hand, there are many other conditions which will induce the abnormal cessation of menstruation—a change in climate, a systemic, severe disease, strong drugs used for other purposes, food poisoning, sexual shocks, and so on.

The writer asks what should be done when the menses are late in appearing each month.

I can answer that Yankee fashion—by reversing the question.

What of it if they are late? Has it been definitely established that irregular menses are necessarily a disease process?

I think the burden of proof rests upon those who make such claims.

A normal menstruation will last for from one to three days. It should carry with it clear blood as well as uterine and vaginal refuse, mucus, cells, and sometimes small clots. It should be free from cramps, pain of any kind or other depletion. It should not be devitalizing in any sense.

True enough—we should use sensible precautions and avoid extremes.

I see no necessity for staying in bed nor do I justify vigorous sports or athletics. I see no reason why one cannot pursue the ordinary routine of life without deviation or variation.

Further, I cannot justify the so-called douche for cleanliness. There is nothing unclean about one's own internal secretions if one is in good health.

We may rob ourselves of very important protective defenses if we use either plain water or medicated syringes.

Outside of building the general health to its maximum par and being sure that no pathology exists, I see no justification, whatsoever, in taking any other measures for "regulating" the menstrual function.

The irregularity of the menses is no sign of sterility nor is it an evidence of disease.

The less we interfere with this all-important function, the better off we are unless it can be definitely demonstrated that the irregularity is associated with disease.

It is our interference which is, to such an extent, responsible for the tumors, leucorrheas, sterility and prolapses, together with many other diseases so common among women during their fruitful period.

My final warning is that the writer, as well as others interested, be not taken in by the myriads of advertisements, patent medicines and demagogues who use this very fertile field as a lucrative means of increasing their revenue. Their carefully worded literature, "regulating feminine hygiene," and so forth, and so forth, should deceive no one. Practically all such literature is pernicious and fails to do the work that the vendors claim.

It is a pleasure for me to thank you for the effective service you have given me. When I came to you my arches were completely broken down, walking was a torture. The whole system was badly affected by the condition of my feet. After the first visit I grew better, and have continued to improve. Our neighbor, the Man Who Loves the Bees, when he came to our little high house in the hills one sunny morning, there awhile back, asked us if we had read in the papers about the man who wrecked his automobile against a telegraph pole and pretty near killed himself on account of a bee.

He Was Afraid of a Little Bee

The reason our neighbor had come up to our little high house on this particular morning that we are talking about was to see how two swarms of visiting bees were getting along.

For, as it had happened sometime before, two swarms of tramp bees had taken possession of our little high house. One swarm selected the front of the house and another the rear. They found crevices in the walls and immediately proposed to fill the house with honey.

Fair enough, we said to the bees. You do all the work, and we get the honey.

But, the dickens of it was, they took possession of the rooms of the house, also. And there were bees buzzing upstairs, downstairs and in milady's parlor. Which proved to be not so good.

So, we sent for our neighbor, the Bee Man. And he set up two hives, one in front of the house and one in the rear. Which was just what the bees wanted. Then everything was all right again, only that folks who came to call on us got stung, occasionally. But, that was good for their rheumatism, if they had it.

The way it turned out, after all, was that when the bees got used to the hives, our neighbor came over one night when they were all asleep, and took them over to his own little ranch.

Well, we said to the Bee Man, how was it that a man wrecked his automobile and pretty near killed himself on account of a bee?

He was a town man, our neighbor answered and said. And, you know, he said, town men are scared to death of bees and little flying bugs and everything like that. So, he was ambling along in his auto when a bee flew in on him. He made a wild swipe at the bee, his auto jumped for the telegraph pole, and the ambulance took the town man to the Receiving Hospital.

He was just ignorant, the Bee Man said. All he had to do was to keep on driving, leave a window of his car open, and pay no attention to the bee. The bee wouldn't sting him at all if he would just mind his own business. And even if it had stung him it wouldn't have been nearly so bad as what happened to him.

Bees are too busy to fool with town men in automobiles, said our neighbor. And it was not the fault of the bee if this man wrecked his car and got all smashed up himself.

Every so often when in the Synagogue we express a belief in the immortality of the soul—expressing our personal belief, only, and not presuming to speak for anyone else in the world—there is always some person or other to take us to task.

Those Who Have Thought It All Out

And the way we are taken to task is to be charged with either ignorance or hypocrisy, or both. Our critics say to us that we lack intelligence, and that, furthermore, since the rafters of the Synagogue stretch over the whole earth, including in its membership people of all races and all beliefs and unbeliefs, we stand as a teacher to a great extent. And that we do wrong when we promulgate the antiquated and long exploded theory of the immortality of the soul.

The sane and enlightened minds of the present age no longer believe this "nonsense," say our critics.

Now, it doesn't feel any too good to be hauled over the coals like that. So, just lately, when we had been treated to one of these periodical lambastings, we sat in our little high house in the hills one quiet, starry night and tried to think it all out for ourself, the best way we could, with our limited knowledge and mind power.

Fortunately, at the beginning of our contemplations we remembered the advice of a wise old schoolmaster who had blessed our boyhood years, away back yonder among the blue hills of Penn's Woods, which advice was that when we desired knowledge on any subject our first step should be to learn what men have to say who had devoted their lives to the understanding of that same subject.

And so, this night that we are telling you about, the first thing we did was to ascertain what the wise men of old had discovered to the satisfaction of themselves concerning the immortality of the soul. We consulted only the thinkers, for of what avail is it to consult other than the thinkers?

And to our mind, the most profound thinker of ancient times was Socrates.

There was a man who trained himself to be a thinker. He knew that his brain, or any man's brain, cannot function fully if obstructed by a satisfied stomach. He reduced his physical wants to the utmost minimum. He lived on crusts and "wore the same coat winter and summer," his soul alert to mystery. He fed his brain with thought.

Now, we fear that these folks who take a fling at us are not trained to think as Socrates trained himself. They do their thinking, maybe, on full stomachs and clad in warm clothing.

So, when Socrates tells us that he came to the conclusion that the soul is immortal and that life goes on after what is called "death," we feel rather strengthened in our own belief.

Other of the great pagan thinkers—Plato, Plutarch and others—were of the same belief as Socrates. And down through the centuries of the Christian era we have the great roster of learned believers, not to speak of the illustrious scholars of the Jews.

It is not possible to pit against Socrates and ascetic minds, atheists like Voltaire who were sodden with wine and the flesh pots. Nor Payne and Ingersoll, who were not learned. "Genius is always ascetic," said Emerson.

Of course, every man is entitled to his own belief, whatever it may be. And whatever a man's conscience is, he should be guided by it. Wherefore, our critics are as welcome under the rafters of our far-flung Synagogue as anybody else. Whenever they want the floor they can have it.

We speak merely for ourself. We believe our soul cannot die. And we find it, as far as we are personally concerned, both a reasonable and a happy belief.

CAROLINE WEST

Just a few days before the midsummer new moon, a star swung low and beckoned to Blas Lugo in the historic pueblo of San Gabriel. It was a summons to Blas to leave this world and journey to the next.

He Saw His Great Heritage Fade Away

The day they laid him away in a quiet grave in the ancient cemetery of the Mission Church of San Gabriel, there was a gathering of scions of the old Spanish pioneer families of California such as has not been seen in many a year. They came from far and near to pay the last tribute of respect to a man whose people had once been very great in the land.

This Blas Lugo was a good man in his own right. He was much respected and well beloved. A quiet man who helped his fellow-men without trumpeting his deeds to the ears of the world.

But, outside of all that, Blas Lugo had a historic claim to distinction. His grandsire was no less a man than Don Antonio Maria Lugo, who stood in his day as the most vivid and compelling personality in the whole of California.

Don Antonio Maria Lugo was that man so much spoken of in history who at one time could ride the most fleet of horses for a night and a day without ever outstepping the boundaries of his own possessions. It is said that Don Antonio once could traverse his own soil from the mountain of the Arrowhead at San Bernardino to the Bay of Santa Monica.

When one looks at the California of today and contemplates the nearly three million people who now dwell between San Bernardino and Santa Monica—from the mountains to the sea—Los Angeles and the other important cities, the wealth represented by grain lands, citrus and deciduous orchards, oil wells, factories and a thousand other industrial enterprises; it staggers the imagination to picture what the property once owned solely by Don Antonio Maria Lugo would be worth today to his descendants.

And it seems curious enough that this great empire over which old Don Antonio ruled and which was his very own has slipped quite entirely from the hands of his people.

The same story is to be told of so many of the other families of Spanish California.

In the footsteps of the pioneer race has come the new race of the Gringo to reap the harvest where the first comers planted. Men from all the States of the American Union who never blazed a single trail into California, or anywhere else, have come to the golden land to grow immensely rich with almost no effort whatever.

It seems a pity that the original Spanish-American Californians could not have had some vision of the greatness and the wonder and the immeasurable wealth that the future held for their country.

And among all these strange facts of history there stands out also the fact that the Spanish pioneers and their descendants in California were in possession of the richest gold country that ever existed without even guessing the truth. They walked and rode over hills and valleys that were sown with gold, and they never knew it. They forded streams astride their fleet horses without ever knowing that they rode upon golden sands.

We were thinking of all this when Blas Lugo lay dead in San Gabriel and we had gone into the Old Mission Church to light a candle for him so that his soul might not take the journey to Paradise in the dark.

Chinese Herbs Cured Ulcers of the Stomach Without Operation

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:—

I have suffered with ulcers of the stomach for several years and getting worse recently. I have tried different remedies and doctors, also had X-rays taken which showed the ulcers at the lower mouth of the stomach. The medical doctors told me that the only way to get well would be to undergo an operation which I refused.

I was recommended to try Chinese Herbs at which time I commenced taking the Herb Treatments from S. P. Lee. I got results from the start. After two and a half months treatment I was completely cured without any trace of stomach trouble at all.

I am sure very grateful and pleased and will recommend his treatments to anyone suffering from stomach trouble.

There is nothing that I can advise except that she continue her hot packs and if they become ineffective that she resort to the analgesic or pain-depressing class of drugs. At least, if they have nothing in them to cure, they furnish the merciful phase of subjecting pain, and that is something when the body is too enfeebled to combat pain itself.

Varicosity and Hernia

Santa Barbara, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

I have been a subscriber to the Los Angeles Times for many years.

I had a hernia operation about four years ago which has been successful so far but my left leg has developed a few varicose veins.

Would you advise treating them by injection by a competent physician?

A READER.

In an operation for hernia the tissues which support the loop of descended intestine are sewed and tightened. Thus the herniated intestine can no longer descend and the operation is successful.

However, when the muscles and ligaments are sewed in the course of the operation, adhesions sometimes form against the great veins which lead to the lower limb.

Thus the retarded circulation is indirectly responsible for the presence of varicose veins. This is how the condition is achieved.

As to its treatment by the injection, I would much prefer to recommend that you use natural methods before injecting destructive drugs.

Such injections are intended to coagulate the vein—healing by destruction. True enough—a compensatory group of veins is speedily established and generally not much harm is done.

Instead, however, we should give natural methods a trial. They should consist of:

(1.) Gentle upward massage at least twice per day, being careful not to break any of the vein clusters.

(2.) At least two periods of ten minutes a day each, applying hot and cold water applications—five minutes hot and thirty seconds cold.

(3.) A correction of all constipation by means of diet, exercise and the other measures recommended in my constipation leaflet.

(4.) Exposure of the varicose limbs to the sunshine, gradually increasing the time until one is taking all the exposure one has time for.

I have a leaflet on the subject which I would recommend the reader to procure by sending me a self-addressed, stamped envelope and a loose two-cent stamp.

Suppressed Menstruation

Los Angeles, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

I am a young girl seventeen years of age and would appreciate an answer to the following questions.

Is it true that suppressed menses are caused by cold, fright or weakness?

What should be done when the menses are late in appearing each month?

Are late-appearing mensus harmful?

Thank you. A READER.

This correspondent asks some very vital and pertinent questions on feminine health and hygiene.

There is so much misunderstanding and ignorance on the subject and especially so much abuse that it is high time light were thrown on this flood of ignorance.

Scarcely a day passes but that I receive some manifestation of it. Letters come to me in which mothers are scared into seven fits because their daughters have not menstruated at the age of fourteen or fifteen. Many "do something" and their "doing something" consists of going to doctors who prescribe emmena-

Many Are Unknowingly Starving Themselves To Death

Dangerous Diseases Are Caused by DIET DEFICIENCY

You may be eating quantities of food but nevertheless you are gradually being starved—your system undermined—because of poor assimilation and lack of the necessary 16 minerals of which the body is composed.

PRO-VITA, which contains the concentrated essences of 127 foods, is the first known BALANCED FOOD. It contains ALL the 16 minerals in assimilated form. ARE YOU SUFFERING from painful affliction of the feet, broken down arches, callouses, bunions, etc.?

Ready-made Arch Supports are an unsatisfactory makeshift because everyone's foot is different and the displaced bones, enlarged joints and damaged ligaments complicate matters still further. We make supports from carefully prepared plaster of Paris casts and after them to accommodate changes brought about by the wearing of the supports. In order to give relief and lasting satisfaction it is imperative that the foot be restored to as normal a shape as possible. We have an exclusive experience in the correction of flat-foot, broken down arches and other deformities of the feet, and are able to promise our clients comfort and relief in every case.

It is not necessary to wear clumsy shoes with our supports; on the contrary, we often restore daintiness of appearance to feet badly deformed and unsightly.

CARE OF THE BODY

throughout the entire skin and disappears with the relief of the primary flow of normal or other menstruation.

Of course, pimples or other skin eruptions are not caused by menstruation. However, adequate and copious menstrual flow is often the relief of such skin defects.

The reason for the appearance of pimples is primarily dietetic and secondarily sexual.

The "sweet young thing" consumes too many sweets. She indiscriminately consumes coffee, sometimes a cocktail or two and colossal quantities of starches. She takes laxatives instead of having natural bowel movements and piles on cosmetics of every conceivable type instead of permitting her skin to breathe and sweat.

As a result, the skin clogs easily. Infection and eruption are built upon a foundation of toxic poison accumulation, poor elimination and cosmetic suppression.

The secondary reason is sexual congestion.

Surrounded by every influence favoring the development and encouragement of the sexual instinct, we early in life find sexual abnormalities. Sexually erotic literature is purveyed in thinly disguised form in the majority of magazines sold at any corner newstand.

Stimulative accounts of sexy scandals sell newspapers. The mind is aroused by movies and magazines, personal accounts and racy novels. Then comes stimulating diet—the large quantity of congestion-producing foodstuffs.

Other perversions such as masturbation or early sexual experience substitute for an early natural development.

The sexual abnormalities run a close second to the dietetic ones. The two together easily produce the symptoms of abnormal menstruation, pimples, blackheads, skin eruptions, and so forth.

The solution, of course, is evident:

(1.) Dietetic correction.
(2.) Exercise in liberal quantities.
(3.) The minimum use of cosmetic lotions, creams, salves, ointments and powders.
(4.) The normalizing of the sexual instinct, preferably in marriage, pregnancy and reproduction so that the functions can express themselves in a physiological manner instead of in the pathological way in which they show themselves with the majority of our young women, today.

Value of Treatment in the Aged

El Segundo, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

I have had a chronic trouble in the back, shoulders and right arm for many months. I went to a chiropractor in December of last year and had three treatments. I felt much worse afterward. Severe pain ensued in the back of neck and head.

I have tried dieting, also hot water applications and electric pads.

I lie awake for hours many nights.

The pain in back of the head and neck now comes each morning at about ten o'clock and is relieved only by continued hot applications.

I am eighty-two years of age.

Can you suggest anything?

A READER.

There comes a period in our lives when the ability to respond to tried and true treatment is practically nil. No matter what type of therapy we apply, the success of treatment invariably depends upon the responsive capacity of our system.

We know, for instance, that certain drugs have a definite, specific action. The same is true of manipulative treatment such an electrotherapy, and so forth. This action, however, whatever it may be, is intrinsic inside of the body. The treatment merely sets the machinery in motion. The work itself must be done by the body.

When we arrive at that period of age or utter breakdown of health, where we fail to respond to any customary method of treatment, there is not much left for us except trial and error—seeking and searching—until we find the therapy which may relieve, if not cure.

In this case a woman of eighty-two

The Landlord's Lament

By Syl MacDowell

SOME words in our curious language are inherently funny. Take for instance that noble term, cheese. Cheese is good for a laugh anywhere, any time. So is pants. Pants, without which there can be no dignity, is ordinarily considered quite funny.

There are other words imbued with a special and sinister meaning that Webster never intended they should have. Let us contemplate with awe that expression, landlord.

Landlord! Oooh! It is the perfect synonym for pig-eyed, ham-hocked, flat-footed villainy. While landlady . . . well, landlady is almost equal to a violent epithet.

But now it turns out that the axiomatic significance of the words landlord and landlady is all a ghastly mistake. This may be a trifle difficult for any lifelong tenant to believe. It was for me. I had to ask a lot of them about it before my doubts were properly quelled.

It's all too terrible. My ears still ring with the diabolical gippery we renters have committed. We, after all, are the villains of the piece—Mr. and Mrs. Tenant.

We fresco the furniture with burning cigarettes, use linen napkins for mops, splatter ink on the carpets, nick the best dishes and use apartment-house blankets for auto robes.

Yes, for original and variegated deviltry we Los Angeles renters seem really to beat his Satanic Majesty, himself. Here are some of our crimes:

"Once upon a time," a veteran landlord of Sunset Boulevard told me, "I was headquarters for the milk of human kindness. Yes, sir, I was a regular creamery. Why, my renter could come along with a hard-luck yarn and tap me for a gallon.

"So it came about that a pair of newlyweds settled in my place. They had barely enough to pay the rent, without a dollar left over to deposit for light and gas.

"The little bride came to me with tears in her eyes and just begged me to put up the five bucks.

"I weakened. Along came the end of the month and the turtle doves got their gas bill. They both came to me raving. It was too much.

"'Why, you old stiff,' yelled the hubby, 'I bet you get a rake-off on this. No wonder you were so blamed generous!'"

"I couldn't say anything for a minute. When the power of speech returned, I answered:

"'Lissen, buddy. That little speech of yours has made this a tough world for the next customer who comes along and asks me for a favor. From now on I'm a hard-headed business man. I'm going to laugh myself to death over hard-luck stories. And may the world have merely on your soul if you ever can't pay your rent on the dot!'"

"Listen to this one," a Boyle Heights landlady told me. "Now I try to run a quiet, respectable house, see? One day an old dame comes and rents a two-room shelf on the top floor. She looks okay, smacks down a deposit, and just as she was leaving she hesitates and says:

"'Oh, I forgot to tell you I have a bird. Do you mind—'

"'No, not a bit,' I answered foolishly. 'Bring him along. Makes things homey.'

"She did. She brought her lousy bird. And what a bird it turned out to be! It was a green parrot with a line of talk like an army mule-skinner.

"It got to cussing so loud one day that all the rest of my tenants threatened to move, so I had to go upstairs to settle things. Well sir, when I went in that apartment, that bird jumped onto me and with horrible squawks started to rip the clothes off my back.

"So no more birds. Not here."

A landlady in charge of an elite flat building on West Sixth street told me she showed a vacancy to a fastidious couple one day last month. They got back in the lobby, and there in the presence and hearing of a lot of her respectable, dignified tenants, the woman prospect asked loudly:

"'Any bedbugs?'"

"I told her," said the maitresse de flats, "to please go away and look for the sort of place she was accustomed to. All the way down the street I heard her husband jawing at her.

"'What a swell crack to make!' he said. 'That's the best place I've seen all day and here we get thrown out because you can't keep your trap closed.'"

"My champion tenant," said a South Pasadena landlord, "was a prosperous-looking middle-aged retired business man from somewhere in Iowa. Early one morning I caught him going around at the doors taking nickels and dimes out of milk bottles. Tie that one!"

The smartest stunt was the departing tenant who said: "Look here, landlord, I'm going to leave you this little rug here by the desk, see?"

Mr. Landlord picked up the rug and found—Where the smart boy had spilled a bottle of ink!

It is impossible to keep ferns in hallways in most neighborhoods. The tenants like to pick fronds off of them to go with table bouquets when they have company.

As for dogs, there appears to be a wide range of opinion. Some landlords and ladies say dogs make better tenants than most people. In other hostelries, Towser gets the bum's rush on sight. They'd as soon think of letting the automobile in the house.

Nearly all good apartment-houses make a vacuum cleaner tour of the place at least once a week.

"It pays," agree the rent collectors. "Nothing like a weekly check-up to find out how a tenant enjoys home life." Last year the location of several stills was reported to the police by landlords and landladies.

It seems to be a firmly-founded belief that men make better tenants than the erstwhile gentle sex. They are seldom home and make fewer demands on the management. While it is true that some men may slide down banisters and drop razor blades in light wells, they never complain about the hot water being lukewarm and rarely attempt to hang silk underthings in the roof sunroom while some other tenant has a bridge party on there.

The radio has complicated the landlord's problem. It is a peculiar fact of human nature that the horrible noises made by our own set never sound half so badly as the ones that come from our neighbors. Radio has brought joy to many firesides but it too has thrown many apartment-houses into a state of civil war.

There are cooking schools and sewing classes and courses in apartment-house management. But why doesn't somebody start training families to be model tenants? That, say the landlords and landladies, will do more toward bringing universal peace than all the Kellogg treaties and Geneva pacts and Bok prizes that ever were offered.

Blind?

They call him blind. I only know
That happiness is shining in his face;
That his soul like a prism has caught the glow
Of Heaven's unquenchable grace
And sent it forth again.

No radiant dawn with its promise fair,
No sunset's smoldering flame can light
His sightless eyes. And yet I dare
To say "For Him There Is No Night."
God gave him Light.

Light, Life, glows in his face and sings
In the warmth of his voice, and we with sight
See more because of him. He brings
A faith in things unseen, a height
Of joy not glimpsed before.

HELEN MARR BROWN.

BUNIONS

We have invented a day and night appliance for bunions and overlapped toes, and we have ever reason to believe it will correct nine cases out of ten.

The night splints are worn while sleeping and the muscles are relaxed, to stretch the contracted tendons that distort the toes and cause this hideous deformity.

The day reducing appliance shields the bunion, hides the deformity and holds the toes in proper alignment and the normal traction for the bones will be re-established and in a short time bunion disappears completely and forever.

Why "The Tartars" on the Steppes of Russia Were Seldom Ill

According to most eminent authorities, their principal diet consisted of fermented milks, such as Kumis or Kefir.

Cognizance of the fact that this food remedy which has served the Tartars so well, and after surviving the ages, is still constantly in general use as a health restorer in most European countries and CAN NOW BE OBTAINED IN LOS ANGELES, should be important information to the profession and public alike.

The Skin and Menstrual Changes

San Diego, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

Would you please advise me as to what to do to clear my back of pimples which seem to come from inflamed blackheads? (My skin is quite oily.)

These pimples seem worse during my menstrual period.

I am not troubled with constipation.

I would be glad to go on a diet if you think it would help to clear up this condition.

Thank you for your kindness and help.

A READER.

The blood stream of women undergoes periodic changes with the fluctuations of the menstrual period. In addition to menstruation's being a discharge of blood and food which has been prepared for an embryo, we may consider menstruation as a systemic phenomenon which occurs with periodic regularity. That is, menstruation is the period of congestion. The finish of menstruation is the period of relief from congestion.

The congestion, however, occurs in more than the maternal tissues. It is a systemic congestion in which the blood stream carries off its surcharge of nutritional materials. At this time a skin defect becomes emphasized, due largely to the presence of certain substances otherwise lacking in the circulation.

The congestion of tissues distant from the maternal menstruating tissues is evidenced in another phenomenon which is known as "vicarious menstruation."

Vicarious menstruation is a relief of the menstrual flow in the form of a nose hemorrhage, a mouth hemorrhage or even a skin hemorrhage.

This is merely evidence of the fact that the menstrual congestion is present are added to bread when it becomes stale. I know scores of mothers who consider that breadstuff is unfit for their children until it is at least four or five days old—another one of our popular supersitions.

There is nothing in stale bread which is not present in fresh bread, while on the other hand, there may be some things in stale bread which are certainly not present in fresh bread—namely, mold and fungi.

If you have ever noticed the molds growing on bread, you will have observed that whole wheat bread molds much sooner than does white bread. Such molds are comparatively invisible in their early periods, while it may take several days before they are evidenced to the naked eye. Hence, consumers of stale bread very often eat invisible molds or fungi, while fresh-bread users do not. So please destroy the fetish of stale bread superiority over fresh bread.

Concerning her statement, "If I try to eat lettuce, peas, prunes, spinach or anything with skin, it forms gas around my heart," I would recommend that she try consuming such foods but one at a time. For instance, let her make a meal of nothing more than spinach—another of nothing more than lettuce—and so on.

The best method of preparation—if cooking is necessary—is to steam them slightly in a pressure steamer.

She should use no condiments nor spices.

If she be intolerant to them, she should make the quantity very small and the frequency greater.

I have had very marked success in overcoming such intolerance and gaseous fermentation by placing my patients on a two-hour feeding schedule, sometimes using no more than a few tablespoonfuls for a feeding. After several days tolerance will be built up.

This is much more recommendable than to achieve the fixed idea that she must have the starchy foods exclusively merely because they are least productive of immediate trouble.

Most of us get a definite idea of our diet and hold that as a set idea to the exclusion of all else. It is thus that we become habituated to an abnormal method of eating instead of trying to correct our appetites and to fit our food intake to a more sensible plan.

watch. Eddie drew it forth as we drove through a vast acreage of vineyards. Inside the back cover was engraved "From Willie to Eddie" and the date. That had been a great day, Eddie said.

I felt it had been a great day for Willie, for even then Willie had started to live Eddie's life. What bleedings the older brother had passed through, a

I'd like you to—" He choked for breath and coughed.

"What?" I asked gently, leaning over him.

"One more fight here," he said. "Get him, Spider Webb, before Eddie goes East and—" His voice was a whisper—"I go West."

"I'll get him," I said huskily. "I got a down with a ring post. I'd do a hell of a lot more than that for Willie Hennigan."

It was only four days to the fight. To make Willie Hennigan as happy as possible I faked a training grind for Eddie: had him don running trunks at the foot of the hill and gallop to the big gate behind the driver. He reached Willie's he said finally and it sounded, wistfully, "I loved Willie Hennigan. He was the manliest fighter I ever knew and the gamest. He never got a break in life so far as I know." He paused. "Do you know why he hated Webb?"

"Sure," I replied: "Webb was the only bird he couldn't lick."

Brown laughed bitterly. "Hell," he

THE COUNT OF TEN

By Jack Casey

A WISECRACKER in Barney's place in Spring street had pulled another nifty. He had just called dapper little Eddie Londos the Count of Ten.

The crack halted a dozen punching bags and prompted twelve perspiring and aspiring-to-be champions to look doorward and grin as Eddie stepped in. Eddie mistook the grins for a friendly welcome and waved gallantly.

He was unaware that he had just been christened. In fact, if you had asked him Eddie would have told you he had been christened twenty-four years before, christened Edward Lawrence Londos, and that his brother Willie, aged ten at the time, had acted as godfather. Eddie then, in the eyes of his mother, was a prospective president or priest. Fate, with scant respect for a mother's hopes, ruled him off both tracks and made him a pug and a poor pug at that.

In seven years of fighting in Los Angeles rings under various pseudonyms, Eddie Londos had been knocked out so often that he had lost track of the count. Referees who had toiled ten above his prostrate figure had come and gone and still Eddie Londos fought on.

He was a preliminary boy, fighting in the four and six-round matches that precede the main bout on a fight card. Ordinarily a pugilist fighting preliminaries is either a youngster going up the line or a veteran coming back, and seldom do they stay in the ranks more than a year or two. The embryo passes on to bigger fields and purses, the veteran, punch-crazed and often goofy, finally fades from the picture.

Eddie Londos neither went up nor faded out. He kept on fighting. Fight fans, finding little else in him to cheer, cheered his gameness. And Eddie was game. He fought until he fell. Then if he could crawl to his feet he fought some more. There was something magnificent in the sheer doggedness of Eddie's perseverance. He never seemed to grow discouraged. Always trying, he grinned a blood-smear of a grin and threw punches until he went down and stayed down.

Along Cauliflower Row in Spring street, where every loft building houses a fight gym, Eddie Londos was known as a setup. Any good boy, they said, could take him. In fact most of them had. Sometimes they told him that they didn't need a good boy for the job, that a bum could do. They called him palooka meat, insulted him even further in the hope of starting something, but Eddie never replied. He simply grinned and let it go at that.

When Cauliflower Row, exasperated at failure, grew too harsh or abusive, Eddie trickled out and went on his way. Then from the top of the stairs they'd call him "yellow" and a "dude," discounting his gameness in the ring and accentuating his taste in raiment. This in a sense was a victory for Eddie, for unbeknownst to the Row, Eddie went two flights up for his clothes and never paid more for a suit than $25.

They were snappy suits, tailored to fit, but they needed one touch which Eddie supplied. He ripped out the label of the cut-rate outfit, substituting the label of Hollywood's most exclusive tailor. As the clothes, once on Eddie, looked as if they had been tailored by the gentleman whose label they bore, Spring street took it for granted they were and resented Eddie's supposed exclusiveness. It was this resentment on top of Eddie's latest defeat that brought him his new moniker.

He had entered Barney's place mistaking the laughs for a greeting, only to have "Slaughterhouse" Ryan, a much battered heavyweight, step to his side and take the stance of a fight club announcer. The pug, throwing one paw over Eddie's shoulders, raised the other in the air and yelled:

"Gents, allow me to present the latest sensation in unconsciousville—Eddie Londos, better known as de Count o' Ten."

Came ribald applause, guffaws and handclaps.

"T'ree cheers for de Count," yelled Sammy Mason, but instead of cheering he made raucous sounds known in the Row as "the birdie." The gym roared.

I was standing with Barney, had come in a moment before to pick up notes for a boxing column I run in the Sunday sports page called "Picking the Queensberries." Barney was chortling, "A smart crack that, what I mean. Dude kid, always gettin' goaled. Print it; it's a nifty."

He nudged me, but I made no reply. I was looking at Eddie Londos. And strangely enough Eddie Londos was looking at me. He was, after a fashion, still smiling, only he wasn't. There was a smile on his lips, but none in his eyes.

In his eye was the look I had once seen in the eyes of a man sitting in a death cell hoping for a reprieve; a look in which was mingled bitterness, fear and despair.

"Gents, allow me to present the latest sensation."

I mumbled something to Barney and started out. Eddie passed out of the door before me. The crowd was still laughing, coarse laughter which suddenly went dim as I closed the door. On the stairs Eddie Londos, now white, wheeled suddenly upon one as I was about to pass and, grasping my arm and pushing his face close to mine, said:

"Print that crack they pulled up there and—"

"And what?" I said, trying to appear calm.

"I'll kill you," he said.

We hadn't stopped walking; went plomping down the dirty wooden stairs a step at a time. Somebody opened the street door, three flights below and the roar of Spring street rushed in, then faded as the door went shut. Eddie jerked me to a stop. The noise of the door made harsh echoes which seemed long in dying, then died so suddenly they seemed louder.

I looked at Eddie and swallowed. Then I flared up. Shaking his hand loose I pushed him from me. "You got a heluva nerve, a punk like you," I said, "threatening me. Where do you get that stuff? I'll print what I damn please, see?"

I pushed my face resolutely toward his, knotting my fists. I expected he'd swing and that presently we'd be tumbling down the stairs in each other's arms. Instead, he looked at me with the look of a child unexpectedly slapped, and backed away.

"You're right," he said. "I'm sorry. I shouldn't have cracked that way. I guess I was—err—upset, it was so unexpected, that crack upstairs. Right away when I saw you I pictured it in the papers just as Slaughterhouse pulled it. I —I guess I lost my head at the thought of it. You know—it's bein' in the papers." His hands folded and unfolded, and he somehow seemed to sag.

"I'm only a punk, I know," he continued, shaking his head, "just a haman'-egger, but—but—" He came forward with his hands out. "If you only just keep that crack outa the paper, Mister Doyle; you know, just forget it, it would—would mean more to me than anything I know of in life. In fact, Mister Doyle, it mustn't go in the paper, it just can't go in the paper, what I mean, see?"

He was crying, crying unashamedly, as he had me by both arms looking up into my face.

"It ain't me," he added. "I ain't askin' it for me. It's—well—it's somebody else, what I mean, see?"

I saw. We shook hands and he blew his nose and flecked away two tears which rested glistening on his cheeks. Silent, we walked down the stairs. Of course it was a girl, and he, poor sap, was nuts enough to cry over her. She must never know that to Spring street he was such a dude palooka they derisively dubbed him the Count of Ten. Else, perhaps, she would kayo him also.

On the sidewalk he thanked me again, started for a cut-down Ford standing at the curb, then turned back.

Maybe you knew him," he said, stepping before me.

"Him?" I said. "Who?"

He gulped. "My brother."

I shook my head. "I don't think so," I said.

"Willie Henningan." He spoke the name softly.

"Willie Hennigan!" I almost shouted it. "Willie Hennigan—your brother?"

He nodded.

I grasped his arms. "Willie Hennigan," I said, "was the greatest lightweight this town ever saw."

"Sure," Eddie blew his nose. Sure he was."

I was excited. "What became of him? Where is he?"

He choked up. "At San Fernando Veterans' Hospital. Almost dead. It was because of him I—er—"

"Didn't want me to publish that crack. As if I would! As if I'd ever cast a slur on any one connected with Willie Hennigan. What a fighter he was!"

I almost choked, myself, at memories of him. And now almost gone. Willie Hennigan dying! What a fighter he had been, what a fighter. God! They don't turn 'em out, any more, like Willie Hennigan. There never were many like him. Born to the racket. Had everything, heart of a lion, and what a sock! Science? It was his middle name.

And then right in his prime he had disappeared. Vanished like a wisp of smoke. Now I recalled he had gone to war and that was the last we had heard of him. What a lousy racket the fight game was, when we could so easily forget fellows like Willie Hennigan. Imagine a palooka labeling Willie Hennigan's kid brother the Count of Ten with Willie Hennigan within earshot! He'd have gone through Barney's gym like a Rotarian through a clambake. It would have been a shambles. Heavyweights, middleweights, any kind of weights.

He'd have murdered 'em, strung 'em out. Made a necklace of stiffs. What had happened? What had the war done to him?

"Gassed," explained Eddie. "Got it with the marines at Vimy Ridge. Got it bad, too."

The gas had made a lunger out of him. He had been one now for years, dying by inches; hadn't been outside the hospital in months; but game! Ah, there were few Willie Hennigans. So game that he came back, out for all time, and kept his plight a secret by resuming his real name of Londos. Wanted no help. He had buried the great boy that was Willie Hennigan, and as Willie Londos he would take the gaff as his Creator willed until the end.

"You don't know him, Mr. Doyle. He's just a shadow. Don't weigh seventy-five pounds."

It was unbelievable that the fighting machine that had once been Willie Hennigan had rusted to nothing.

"I'm going out there now," said Eddie. His voice quavered. "I go out every day. Maybe you'd like to—"

We went out in Eddie's funny Ford. It was thirty miles, but I'd have gone three hundred to see Willie Hennigan and walked three thousand if it would have saved his life. There was no conversation until we reached the State road and were in the quiet of the hills. Then Eddie Londos unbuttoned his soul and turned it inside out.

Eddie Londos had never wanted to fight; he wasn't a fighter and knew it. But he loved Willie, whose name of Hennigan had been a managerial gift in the days when a Gaelic moniker was an asset. Willie, in his prime just before the World War and a step away from a championship, had been Eddie's god. He lived Willie's triumphs; worshiped his very being. There was no one on earth to Eddie Londos like his big brother Willie.

Strangely enough, I sensed, Willie in turn lived Eddie's life. He planned that his kid brother was to be a greater fighter than even he had become. He would be greater because Willie would teach him to avoid the mistakes he had made in climbing from ten-dollar curtain-raisers to one-thousand-dollar guarantees.

He taught Eddie to spar, and Eddie hated it but wouldn't tell Willie. He pretended enthusiasm for the career his big brother outlined and tried not to be sick when Willie took him to bouts, and one or two were so one-sided the beaten man bled and reeled and sometimes vomitd from blows to the body. At these times black specks would swim before Eddie's blurred eyes, and the pit of his own stomach would be flooded with nausea.

Just before Willie went to war, Eddie had his tenth birthday and received his first communion. Willie had received this sacrament of his faith nine years before, when Eddie, was a baby. Willie had been a shabby kid then, had never known a new suit of clothes, and had gone to the altar in home-tailored pants and a simple blouse but a gorgeous bow tie made from the satin sash that had been part of his mother's wedding dress.

What Willie had missed at his first participation as a communicant he made sure that Eddie had at his. Eddie's suit was tailored, his shoes new and squeaky and he had a flat-crowned derby hat and gloves of white kid. Willie's gift in commemoration of the event was a gold

Care of the Body

By Philip M. Lovell, N. D.

Artificial Supports

Our breathing expert, Dr. S. Wesley Martin, presents his views on the subject of artificial supports for the abdomen. His method of solving these troubles via breathing is highly proficient although I cannot agree with him to the extent of saying that a support is of such little value as he states.

I do agree with him, however, that in the great mass of cases a support should be only temporary and for the period of the emergency alone—no longer.

I also agree with him in the great value of breathing exercises although I would augment them by a vigorous regime of physical exercise as well.

In any event, his articles are always interesting.

"It will be news to a great many people to know that nature has provided supports for every kind of prolapse to which the human body is liable. The internal organs are intended to be kept in suspension and are supported by the abdominal muscles. When the abdominal muscles are weakened, as they mostly are among civilized peoples, the bowels drop, the other organs drop on top of them and prolapse of the uterus, stomach, bladder, etc., are no uncommon results. Constipation is nearly inevitable.

"To wear an instrument to raise any organ into place and keep it there is of no permanent use and certainly cannot cure.

"If the abdominal muscles and diaphragm are straightened and all the organs raised by right breathing, a natural support is supplied and the straightened abdominal muscles make the cure permanent. Prolapse of the uterus is the most easily corrected, as the raising process begins from the lowest abdominal muscles.

"To wear an artificial support is always more or less injurious as any good doctor will testify unless he happens to be a selling agent.

"Any prolapse is weakening, and for the sake of permanent health the cause of the trouble should be removed and not accentuated."

Diet and Fissure

Baldwin Park, Cal.

Dear Dr. Lovell:

I have been listening to your talks over the radio. I have certainly enjoyed them and received a lot of good from them. I also always read your articles in the Sunday Times.

Two weeks ago I was operated upon for hemorrhoids and fissure which had been very painful. There hasn't been any pain since the operation.

What I should like to know is this: Is there any danger of their growing again?

I have had more or less stomach trouble for the last eighteen years. It seems to be a great deal of nervousness. Before I left New York two years ago I couldn't digest a thing. Everything turned to gas which formed around my heart.

Now I am trying to build up a poultry business which is hard work and which causes a lot of worry. It is a great responsibility on my shoulder. Consequently, my stomach has gone back on me and I have been living on stale whole wheat bread, shredded wheat, broth and chamomile tea for several months. If I try to eat lettuce, peas, prunes, spinach or anything with skin, it forms gas around my heart.

Do you know of a diet that would help me? It would be impossible for me to change my surroundings now, for I am sure that would help me.

I am thirty-six years old.

Thanking you for your kindness, I am

A READER.

This communication presents some very fine points which could be well taken by a considerable number of neurotic men and women who have a vicious circle of troubles. Their stomach trouble makes them nervous and, in turn, their nervousness gives them more stomach trouble. Thus it is necessary to break into the circle somewhere.

The letter is also important for showing the casual relationship between the stomach and the rest of the digestive system. We shall get a clear idea of what takes place if we consider the stomach and bowel as one continuius tube, located far apart but nevertheless functioning alike.

A bad stomach generally means a bad digestive system, the irritation of which ultimately develops homorrhoids. Such irritation goes on for a time and fissure, or the opening of the rectal tissue, takes place.

All such troubles, of course, make one nervous. The continuation of the nervousness certainly does not help the correction of the trouble.

The writer asks whether there is any danger of the hemorrhoids or fissure growing again.

I can answer that question both negatively and affirmatively. There is no danger of the hemorrhoids which have been removed, regrowing, but there is danger of new hemorrhoids growing.

Hemorrhoids are nothing more than swollen veins. When the new veins which have been formed following the operation are again irritated sufficiently, new hemorrhoids may form. The fissure may break open on the old regime of irritating foods. It takes from three to six months for complete healing to occur following an operation for fissure.

The correspondent asks for dietetic advice.

Her statement, "Now I am trying to build up a poultry business which is hard work and causes a lot of worry," is one of the primary obstacles she must overcome.

The sooner a patient who suffers from stomach and intestinal trouble realizes that the mind has everything to do with digestion, that much quicker will he be able to help himself. One will get sick on any diet under the sun if one dilutes one's meals with full portions of worry and anxiety.

However, as concerns the specific nature of the writer's diet, she is too preponderatingly strong on the starches. A diet of stale whole wheat bread, shredded wheat, broth and chamomile tea is certainly neither well balanced nor desirable.

Apropos the staleness of whole wheat bread, there is also a current idea that, somehow or other, new magic properties

HAS YOUR STOMACH GONE "SOUTH"?

Dr. Percy H. Poole

Dr. Georgean H. Poole

The Physical Culture Magazine for May has an article by James Segall, M.D., which points out the prevalence of low stomach and sagged intestines, and indorses abdominal supports as a valuable measure of relief. Bernarr Macfadden, writing on the subject of low intestines, states that the drag on the nerves tends to lead to paralysis of the nerves supplying the intestines. Dr. Segall is of the opinion estimates that 50% of the people have this condition, is an under-estimate.

As we have stated before, it is our firm conviction from experience with thousands of these cases, that maladies such as constipation, sluggish liver, digestive trouble, extreme nervousness, backache and many other ills are unlikely to be permanently corrected by any system of treatment unless the abdominal organs are properly supported. The thousands of patients who are praising Dr. Poole's supports, for the benefits they have given, is evidence of the real merit of this inexpensive measure of relief.

If you are finding it difficult to keep pepped up, or are suffering from impaired body functioning, we urge you to call and talk your case over with Dr. Percy H. Poole or Dr. Georgean H. Poole. There is no charge for consultation or examination. If a support is supplied, the cost will be, unless complicated by rupture, or extra large size, $10.00 or $12.50.

The abdominal organs can be held in a position more favorable to functioning, by using a properly adapted support, and such support can be fitted so as not to interfere with circulation or freedom of muscle action. Unfortunately, all elastic belts, and ordinary store belts and surgical corsets, merely press back and crowd upon the abdominal organs, but the supports adapted by Drs. Poole act like a shelf, which prevents the downward drag, without exerting any pressure upon the turns of the intestines. THE COUNT OF TEN

A WISECRACKER in Barney's place in Spring street had pulled another nifty. He had just called dapper little Eddie Londos the Count of Ten.

In a moment before to pick up notes for a boxing column I run in the Sunday —I guess I lost my head at the thought of him. And now almost gone. Willie Hennigan dying! What a fighter he had been, what a fighter. God! They don't turn 'em out any more, like Willie Hennigan. There never were many like him. Right to the finish. Had everything pears just as Slaughterhouse pulled it. I watch. Eddie drew it forth as we drove through a vast acreage of vineyards. Inside the back cover was engraved "From Willie to Eddie" and the date. That had been a great day, Eddie said.

I felt it had been a great day for Willie, for even then Willie had started to live Eddie's life. What blessings the older brother had missed through a faithless father and an impoverished mother who succumbed early to her lot, Willie had secured with his fists and enjoyed vicariously by showering them upon Eddie. Their mother had been dead two years when Willie went to war. Eddie was in a boarding school in Sonora Town, and didn't know Willie was going until the night he appeared in uniform and said good-by.

"Be a good kid, Eddie," he had said, "and learn all you can. Dan is sending over my light punching bag and gloves and my skip rope. Use 'em every day, kid, and watch your footwork. Work hard and when I come back I'll make you the best little fighter that ever pulled on a glove."

"Then he hugged me," Eddie told me, "and went away. He was crying and so was I, but gee, wasn't I proud of him! Father Hererra had stopped to talk with him in the school yard just before he took me off to one side to say good-by, and I remember Willie saying, "if a guy's business is fighting, father, he shouldn't welsh when a real fight comes along, even though it may be his last one.'

"It was his last one," went on Eddie sadly. "He never had a glove on again. He came home on a stretcher, and aside from one spell when he seemed to improve and could sit up, he's been on his back ever since."

"But what happened after he returned?" I asked.

"Nothing for a while," said Eddie.

"He had put money in the bank in my name in case anything happened to him. I had Father Hererra use it to get him the best doctors, and we bought everything we could think of to make him happy. But he was restless and kept eyeing me, feeling my muscles and telling me to hurry and fill out so I could climb through the ropes. 'I got a hundred fights under my belt,' he would keep saying, 'and I want you to fight 'em for me. And there's one bird you gotta take—Spider Webb.' Willie hated the Spider.

"Spider was the only bird Willie couldn't lick," I said, "that's probably why. The Spider was a good fighter then. He's pretty well shot now."

Eddie continued: "When I was sixteen Willie decided I was ready to start, but I was never to say I was Willie Hennigan's brother or to tell any one he was here in a hospital. It's been seven years since my first fight and Willie still thinks I'm going to be champion. He coaches me every day except when he's too weak, and when I fight and win and get mentioned he reads the papers about me. I have to fight under fake names to cover up the lickings, and so far he's never got wise. When I'm licked I pretend the fight was out o' town at some crossroads where the clubhouse is a shooting gallery and too small to crash the Los Angeles sport pages. Of course if I was a main-eventer I couldn't get away with using different names, but bein' only in prelim's nobody gives a damn."

We left the State road and climbed a steep grade to the hospital.

Willie Hennigan was alone in a small room. At my suggestion Eddie introduced me as a visiting fight manager from New York who planned to find a spot for Eddie in the East. My real identity I knew would flood Willie with memories of happier days, and cause him needless anguish. I hoped he would not recognize me. He didn't. In fact he was very weak. His smile, though, when Eddie bent over him, was beautiful. His eyes lighted up and you could sense the fierce pride he felt in this kid brother. He couldn't talk above a hoarse whisper. "New York's the spot, kid," he said. "You'll make good, too; you got everything. But before you go, kid—I don't think I'll be here when you come back—I'd like you to—" He choked for breath and coughed.

"What?" I asked gently, leaning over him.

"One more fight here," he said. "Get him, Spider Webb, before Eddie goes East and—" his voice was a whisper—"I go West."

"I'll get him," I said huskily. "I got a spot for him right now."

His eyes lighted up.

"Friday night at the Olympic," I said.

He pressed my hand with his shrunken one. I blinked a tear away and abruptly quit the room. "G'by, Willie," I said. "I'll wait for Eddie out here."

Eddie was wiping his eyes when he joined me fifteen minutes later. "What the hell was the idea o' pullin' that Spider Webb thing?" he asked bitterly. "You must 'a' knowed that would excite him. Cripes, he's been tryin' to tell me how to fight him, what his style is an' how dirty he battles. He really thinks I'm going to fight him."

"Well, you are," I said. "I'll fix it with Roy Brown the minute we get back to town. Roy Brown was the greatest admirer Willie ever had. He was matchmaker when Willie fought all his great fights at the old auditorium. I'll not only get him to put you on with Webb Friday night, but we'll put a radio in Willie's room so he'll get the fight blow by blow.

"And break his heart," said Eddie bitterly, "when Webb knocks me out."

"Don't be silly," I replied, "we'll give Webb your end of the purse to take a dive."

In town I left Eddie and going to the Olympic Club got hold of Roy Brown, who had been a matchmaker when Willie was at his peak. I told him the story of Willie and Eddie and of the match I had promised with Webb.

Brown was astonished. He kept repeating over and over, "Willie alive—Willie Henningan alive. Why," he said, "everyone thought he was killed in the war." He turned away in silence and looked fixedly at a photograph of Willie among a hundred others on his office wall—the great Willie Hennigan in fight togs.

"Sure I'll arrange the match for you," he said finally and it sounded, wistfully, "I loved Willie Hennigan. He was the manliest fighter I ever knew and the gamest. He never got a break in life so far as I know," He paused. "Do you know why he hated Webb?"

"Sure," I replied: "Webb was the only bird he couldn't lick."

Brown laughed bitterly. "Hell," he said, "I thought you were smarter than that. The day never dawned in Willie's prime that he couldn't lick six Webbs. No, the story is this, and it is a story, also another one Willie took on the chin from life:

"Down in Sonora Town Webb wronged a girl Willie was in love with; a beauty, half Spanish, half Mex.' Willie made Webb marry her and threatened to kill him if he didn't treat her white. The story never got out, but news that Willie and Webb were bitter enemies did. Figuring the thing a feud and a natural as a boxing attraction, managers matched them up. While Willie hated Webb and could stop him every day in the week, out of respect for the girl he carried him. Every fight. Refused to lick him. But Webb tried hard to lick Hennigan, and that made it look good. They were matched and rematched, fought about six times, I think. I knew the story of the marriage, got it from Father Hererra, a Mex' priest, and one day I asked Willie why he didn't sock Webb proper and put him away. 'Why make her feel bad?' he said."

"So that was it," I said, kicking myself for a dumbbell.

"Part of it," said Roy. "The rest I can surmise. There was a baby born, of course. Well, both she and the baby died of neglect after Willie left for the war. No doubt that's the first thing he learned when he returned half dead himself. He wanted revenge; but the only way he had of getting it was by making the kid brother a fighter. And with typical Hennigan luck, the kid's a lousy fighter."

It seemed unbelievable. It was a shocking thing.

"We got to do something," I said finally.

"We're going to," said Roy Brown finally. "Webb'll dive if I have to knock him down with a ring post. I'd do a hell of a lot more than that for Willie Hennigan."

It was only four days to the fight. To make Willie Hennigan as happy as possible I faked a training grind for Eddie; had him don running trunks at the foot of the hill and gallop to the big gate behind the flivver. He reached Willie's room each afternoon dripping perspiration and looking "in the pink."

I had a male nurse sponge him off, then give him a salt and alcohol rub, after which he lounged, cooling off. They were happy visits for Willie Hennigan. The smell of sweat, the odor of liniment! They brought back memories of his great days. Then the sight of the boy glowing with health—how he loved that kid brother! He devoured with his eyes the rippling muscles, the lithe movements, the silken sheen of skin over hard, firm flesh. "God," his eyes seemed to say, "if I only had that body!"

"You'll kill Webb," he'd say huskily.

"He'll stop him inside five rounds," I prophesied. "Won't you, kid?"

Eddie would flush and nod, flustered.

"It don't seem right to fool Willie," he said to me after every visit. "If I could only lick this guy on the level!"

We said good-by to Willie at six o'clock Friday evening. I was leaving the room as Eddie knelt and held Willie in his arms. "I feel as if it's good-by, Eddie," I heard Willie say. "The doc says I'm through. The last round, kid. But if you beat him I'll go happy. I'll be here by the radio with Roy Brown, Eddie; that is, what's left of me will be. All that I used to be will be with you in the ring helping you batter that human louse. Fight hard, kid, and clean and—" he coughed. "When I see ma up there I'll tell her, kid, I'll tell her."

I fled. I was crying, too.

Five minutes later, when Eddie Londos joined me, he said:

"The minute we get to the club tell Roy Brown this fight is on the level."

We had a dressing-room under the stadium and were first to start for the ring. I had a couple of hoodlum hangers-on for seconds. The bout wasn't important from a fan's viewpoint; just one of a so-called all-star card of four ten-rounders. It was important only to poor Willie Hennigan. Brown had already gone to the hospital with a radio set to sit with Willie.

"For God's sake," Eddie had told him, "if this snake goals me pretend you have lost the connection or somethin', or Willie will be heartbroken."

"I'll make him lay down if you say so," Brown had replied.

"No." The kid was game. "I gotta lick him. If I can't, I'll take my beatin' and go out tryin'. God knows I owe that much to Willie."

"Then good luck," and Brown had left.

We walked toward the ring, passing Webb's dressing-room. Eddie turned back and thumped on the door. "Come out and take your licking, you snake," he yelled.

The heads of Webb and three seconds popped out in amazement.

"Wotcha say?"

"I says come out and take your lickin'," Eddie had wheeled and now moved to the open door. He tapped Webb on the chest. "I'm Willie Hennigan's brother!" He said it softly. "The day never dawned that Willie couldn't lick you. Now he's laid up, almost dead, so I'm goin' to do it for him."

"Laid up—almost dead!" Webb turned white. "Say, wot kind o' hop are you smokin'? Willie Hennigan was knocked off in the war."

"No, he wasn't," I said. "He was gassed and he's dying right this minute in the Veterans' Hospital at San Fernando."

"If he wasn't," said Eddie, "he'd be right here now cuttin' your lousy throat for what you did to Mary Rose."

Webb was speechless, actually shaking, as if he had met a ghost.

We continued our march to the ring.

Ten minutes later, even before the bell rang, the fans were on their feet, the club was a bedlam, and the radio announcer at the ringside, just a step from our corner, was shouting into his boxed-in mike:

"The two men got into an altercation in the middle of the ring and before the referee or seconds could interfere young Londos smashed the veteran Webb in the mouth, splitting his lips and bringing blood. The referee threatened to disqualify the kid, but as Webb hit back and

"Skinny" Hunter's young son and heir is much more interested in the cowboy pictures his daddy manages than he is in school work. He'd rather ride a pony any day than study. But just the same, he doesn't like to be beaten in an argument, even on education topics, and when a boy in the neighborhood bragged about getting an A on his report card, young "Skinny" snorted in derision.

"That's nothing!" he declared. "I get an A grade every morning."

"From your teacher?" asked the other lad, enviously.

"Naw—from the milkman," grinned young "Skinny."

Misleading

After the American doughboy had been in France a few months he picked up a few of the native words and with admirable confidence began conversations with French people that are remembered to this day as examples of how French ought not to be spoken.

After they had returned from the Luneville sector, a soldier of the First Division, billeted along the canal near Bar le Duc, saw the cow belonging to his landlady escape from the field and amble down the road. He rushed into the house and in his best French, told her what had happened.

To his surprise, she failed to understand and the services of a French soldier were enlisted, and he eventually was able to inform her what had happened. She hurried out, rounded up the cow and after returning to the house, laughed for fully five minutes at the puzzled doughboy. It developed that his message ran something like this:

"Mademoiselle! Mademoiselle! Your milk is taking a walk!"

Different

Loose credit, according to a number of prominent financiers, is largely responsible for the recent stock market fluctuations.

"There are two kinds of credit," declared J. P. Morgan, "the kind that builds business and the kind that wrecks it. Also there are two kinds of debtors; those who assume obligations to expand their business and others who assume them to cover up real or approaching losses.

"The other day at the Bankers' Club, two men met in the lounge and after a friendly greeting one of them said: 'I understand your firm failed to pay its bills.'

" 'On the contrary,' laughed the other, 'it failed so that it would not have to pay them.' "

Described

Right now, the June brides are invading the stores and while the clerks are being worked to death, many a laugh intrudes to lighten their labors.

It was one of these blushing brides who sailed into a music store the other day and said: "I want to buy one of your clean, honest, pianos."

"Clean, honest, pianos," gasped the clerk, "I don't think I quite understand you."

"Aw, snap out of it," giggled the girl at the sheet music counter. "The lady wants to look at the uprights."

Insulted

The late Chief Justice Taft used to deplore the dearth of new good lawyers. "We do not have the able men at the bar who made and broke legal precedents as they did in the good old days. It takes hard study and application to make a first-class lawyer and I am afraid the modern college has too many counteracting diversions.

"Too many of our young students are like the senior who was timidly approached by a stammering freshman.

" 'Can you direct me to the library, please?' asked the freshman.

" 'Sorry,' replied the senior, 'but I've only been here four years myself.' "

Worried

Little James Grover of Glendora is worried. The other day, after church, he asked:

"Have you ever told a lie, mother?"

"I'm afraid I have."

"Has papa ever told a lie?"

"Yes, my dear, quite a few."

"Did Aunt Mary ever tell a lie?"

"Why, Jamie, dear, what makes you ask all these questions?" demanded the puzzled mother.

"Well," said the lad, "I was only thinking how lonely George Washington and me would be in heaven."

Naturally

The recent announcement that President Hoover's son had been promoted, brought the usual influx of reporters, who asked young Hoover a number of foolish questions. Finally one of the curious-minded remarked:

"You're in on the financial end of flying, Mr. Hoover. Tell me, is aviation really expensive?"

Mr. Hoover thought for a moment and then said with a laugh:

"Yes. The upkeep is quite considerable."

Unchanged

The hotel men were trying to get through a new bill that would strengthen their power to apprehend and punish bill jumpers. The measure, if enacted, would practically re-establish the old debtors' prison which still looms as one of the horrors of English history.

"That's one of the things of the past that should never be resurrected," declared Senator Borah. "A great many injustices were promulgated in those days when it was a common thing to arrest a man for debt, but that was all done away with, years ago."

"I wonder if that's really true," retorted Senator Capper. "I often hear that a great many of my constituents are pinched for money."

Chaos

A partial eclipse of the sun was scheduled to take place in Philadelphia recently and Dr. Charles P. Oliver, professor of astronomy at the University of Pennsylvania made careful preparations to observe it.

While a reporter stood by with his watch in his hand, Dr. Oliver fastened his eye to the tiny hole in the telescope at the Highland Park Observatory. The watch said 3:10 and at 3:12 the eclipse was scheduled to begin.

The time came and went. Another minute passed; then another. "Heavens!" cried Dr. Oliver, "the eclipse is late!" Practically this meant the end of the world; the collapse of the universe.

"Aw, gee!" muttered the reporter apologetically, "the eclipse isn't late. I just remembered that I set my watch five minutes ahead to make sure I'd be here on time."

Confessed

The Florida was at the Norfolk navy yard. A boatswain's mate was transferred to the Florida but left his dunnage in Norfolk and secured the evening off in order to get it and report to ship next morning.

While returning to the ship by way of a trolley car, he sat beside a little civilian and they were soon chatting together.

"I just put over a good one on the government," laughed the sailor. "I came down from New York yesterday and then got overnight leave to get my bag and hammock. I could just as well have brought them with me, but left them, in order to get leave."

He was summoned before the mast next morning.

"So you put a good one over on the government did you?" asked the skipper, who turned out to be the little man of the trolley episode. "Well, it's the government's turn now. Thirty days restriction to the ship."

Perfection

Claire Windsor, the movie star who broke onto the front page recently through her narrow escape from drowning, was telling friends some of her New York experiences.

"It seems as if everyone is either very poor or very rich," she said, "and the rich have gone in for luxuries that make the old Romans look like pikers.

"One week-end I was the guest of a newly rich oil man whose home avowedly contained the very last word in practical and decorative devices. Imagine my feelings when, after climbing into a luxurious bath of pink marble, I turned on the water and it was colored pink, to match."

Useless

Pat had agreed to accompany his wife on a shopping expedition.

"There's a good pair of boots," presently remarked his wife as they paused before the window of a boot and shoe store. "I believe I'll buy a pair."

Pat looked at the articles indicated and a murmur of surprise escaped him as he took in the price and the notice "Last Seven Days," displayed on the card above them.

"Sure, Mary," he expostulated, "ye don't want to be after buyin' them things."

"And why not?" demanded Mary.

"Begorra!" exclaimed Pat. "Ye want something that will last more than seven days, don't ye?"

DREAM WALTZ

the little family in the usual little flat, in the usual mediocrity of its middle-class routine, was fulfilling its destiny. Hesper, the mother, who had given of her body and her vitality that there might be life. Leonard, the provider, who sought to instill within his family, right doing and living. Yearlings, growing into their maturity under the family roof.

Straw-foot, hay-foot! Routine. Mediocrity. Standardization.

At fifty, Leonard, with the unfinished melodies dormant within him, was reconciled to all this. So, in her way, was the querulous Hesper.

And then one night something happened which changed the complexion of life for Leonard to such an extent, that he could never again feel drab and hopeless and trapped by the machinery of his life. A small, almost infinitesimal thing happened, filling his cup to overflowing; making the future something to care about; something to dream about.

His eldest boy, a slender, rather sensitive-faced youngster brought him a drawing he had made on a sheet of paper. A precocious, really extraordinary portrait of a young girl, executed with vitality, imagination and beauty.

Captured into that face on the paper, laid in cunning gifted stroke, line by line, was all the quality that eighteen years before Leonard in another way had poured into the Dream Waltz. Life was not done!

Double Crossing the Sea

By Weare Holbrook

The only way to see rural France is on a bicycle.

PIONEERS may have a tough time of it, but they enjoy one advantage over the timid souls who tread the beaten paths. They don't have to listen to advice from people who have been there before.

Christopher Columbus encountered many difficulties before he finally set sail from Palos in his search for a direct route to the Indies. He had to do egg tricks and persuade Queen Isabella to trade her tiara for a pawn ticket; the skeptics jeered at him and his crew mutinied; but Columbus was undaunted. He was blazing—or sloshing—a trail, and there was nothing but the wind and the weather to keep him from going where he pleased. No one had said to him, "Oh, you must stop at the Canary Islands. You can get the most marvelous bananas at Fuerteventura for almost nothing, and there's a darling old banana grower there that I want you to meet. Just tell him you're a friend of mine, I'll give you his address . . ."

There was no one that Columbus had to look up at Guanahani or Cypangu; in fact, there was no one there at all. His itinerary had not been supervised by a host of well wishers who were eager to display their knowledge of foreign parts by recommending hotels and restaurants. If it had been probably he wouldn't have discovered America.

Pioneering is almost a lost art today. The globe has been quite thoroughly trotted from Pole to Pole, and it is impossible to get off the beaten path except in an airplane. Consequently, the only way that the prospective traveler can avoid taking advice in habit-forming quantities is to keep his plans secret.

When Mr. Otway went to a travel-bureau last month and intimated to the capable young lady at the desk that he and his wife were thinking of going abroad this summer, the young lady was only mildly interested. "What time do you usually go over?" she inquired, idly fingering a sheaf of pamphlets.

"I—we've never been over before," Mr. Otway confessed.

"I beg your pardon?" said the young lady.

"This will be our first trip," he explained apologetically; "that is, if we take it."

The young lady stared at him for a moment. "Oh, Mr. Abernathy!" she called. "Will you come here, please?"

Mr. Abernathy, a tall, suave young man with an orchid in his buttonhole, glided over to her and a whispered consultation followed.

"Miss Frankel tells me that you have never been abroad before," said Mr. Abernathy in his best bedside manner.

Mr. Otway nodded.

"Well, we all have to start some time," Mr. Abernathy observed. "Better late than never, eh? That's what I always say."

"I'll bet you do," thought Mr. Otway.

"Now, if you'll just tell me how long you intend to be away," continued the other. "I'll map out a tentative itinerary for you and Mrs. Otway—I may call her Mrs. Otway, mayn't I?—and arrange all the details . . ."

When Mr. Otway arrived home that evening he carried two bales of pamphlets and a neatly typewritten itinerary.

According to this itinerary (which covered sixty-seven of the principal towns of England and the Continent in thirty-nine days) the Otways were to be handled with speed and dispatch, like a couple of flivvers on the conveyer belt of an assembling plant. The travel bureau had eliminated all lost motion; the itinerary was a marvel of efficiency. It allowed them three whole days for Paris and the chateau country.

"Listen to this," said Mr. Otway, reading from page 19. "First day: Longjumeau, Etampes, Orleans (Cathedral and a house of Joan of Arc—lunch) continue to Chambord, thence to Blois. Second day: Visit Chateau of Blois, Chambord, Chaumont-sur-Loire, Amboisee, Chenonceaux (lunch,) afternoon to Azay-le-Rideau, Tours. Third day: Tours, Vendome, Chateau-dun, Chartes (lunch,) visit Cathedral and city, afternoon to Rambouillet, back to Paris about 7 p.m."

"Then what?" inquired Mrs. Otway.

"Then," he continued, consulting the next page, "you will be transferred to the railway station."

"On a stretcher," added Mrs. Otway.

"It seems to be a very complete tour," said her husband hopefully.

"I don't like the idea of being handed along like a hot plate," she objected. "I think we would see more and learn more if we traveled independently. The Twiddles have been over ever so many times, and they can tell us anything we want to know."

She was right. The Twiddles were ready to give advice until it hurt. As soon as Mr. Otway mentioned the contemplated trip abroad, the Twiddles began tapping the inexhaustible reservoirs of their experience. "If you intend to be in England earlier than the middle of July," said Mrs. Twiddle, "be sure to take plenty of warm clothing. It's very damp. Not so much chilly as—well, damp, if you know what I mean. Of course, you'll visit the lake district?"

"I don't know," said Mr. Otway, doubtfully. "I'm not much of a swimmer."

"You must visit the lake district," she insisted. "It's where Wordsworth lived. 'A primrose by the river's brim, a something something was to him'—you remember? England is so full of associations. London, especially. There's the Mermaid Tavern, for instance. That's where Dr. Johnson used to eat and wipe his hands on a dog—or was it the Cheshire Cheese? Anyway, the food is atrocious, but it's just full of associations. Are you fond of Keats?"

Mr. Otway shook his head. "I like plain American cooking best," he said.

"Here's the address of a swell little Italian restaurant in Soho," announced Mr. Twiddle, scribbling on a card and handing it to Mr. Otway. "The head waiter's name is Guido. Just tell him you're a friend of mine and he'll do anything for you."

"My goodness!" exclaimed Mr. Otway. "Have they got prohibition over there, too?"

"No, but it's just as well to know the ropes. For instance if you walked into the first bicycle shop you came to in Chantilly they'd try to rent you a wheel for 24 francs a day. But if you tip the concierge of your pension 10 francs, he'll kiss you on both cheeks and let you ride his bicycle all day for nothing . . . Of course, you'll cycle through the chateau country, won't you?"

"If you insist," asserted Mr. Otway feebly.

"The only way to see rural France is on a bicycle," Mr. Twiddle declared. "And travel as light as possible. The first time I went abroad, I left my baggage in a hotel, and cycled all over France with a little musette I picked up in Paris."

"Well," said Mrs. Otway, "I suppose they aren't as strict about morals over there, but—"

"A musette," Mr. Twiddle explained hastily, "is a sort of knapsack."

"Oh," said Mrs. Otway. There was an awkward pause, and Mrs. Twiddle came to the rescue with a sovereign remedy for seasickness. "The best thing to do as soon as you get on board is to pack your ears firmly with gauze until the pressure on the tympanic membranes can be felt. Seasickness, you know, is usually caused by disturbances in the semi-circular canal."

"I understand the English Channel is pretty rough, too," said Mr. Otway knowingly.

"And when you sleep," she continued, "lie on the right side with the knees drawn up to the chin—"

"Nonsense!" interrupted Mr. Twiddle. "The only sure cure is a drop of iodine on a lump of sugar. And don't forget to tip the dining-room steward 10 per cent the day before you land—"

"—and the bath steward," Mrs. Twiddle chimed in, "and insist upon boiled water in Barcelona and take along plenty of silk stockings, because they're priceless in Paris, but if you open all your packages of cigarettes and take a few out you can get a genuine Burberry overcoat for almost nothing, except on bank holidays, which come four times a year, and the crowds are simply dreadful, though, of course, Mussolini may have changed all that since we were there—"

By the time the Otways were ready to sail their solicitous friends had presented them with two bicycle pumps, a crate of dried fruit, three steamer rugs, a first aid kit, two travel diaries, seventeen letters of introduction, six unfolding maps with routes especially marked, and the addresses of dentists in Dublin, chiropodists in Cadiz, masseuses in Milan—in fact, a complete trans-Atlantic red book.

As the ship steamed out of New York Harbor Mr. Otway mulled through the mass of accumulated data which filled the stateroom, turning over letters, pamphlets, guide books, folders and odd bits of paper. "I knew they'd forgotten something," he announced at length.

"In heaven's name—what?" demanded Mrs. Otway wearily.

"Here we are going to Venice," he replied with a note of triumph in his voice, "and no one has given us the address of a good place to rent waterwings."

He will salute you and let you ride his bicycle for nothing.

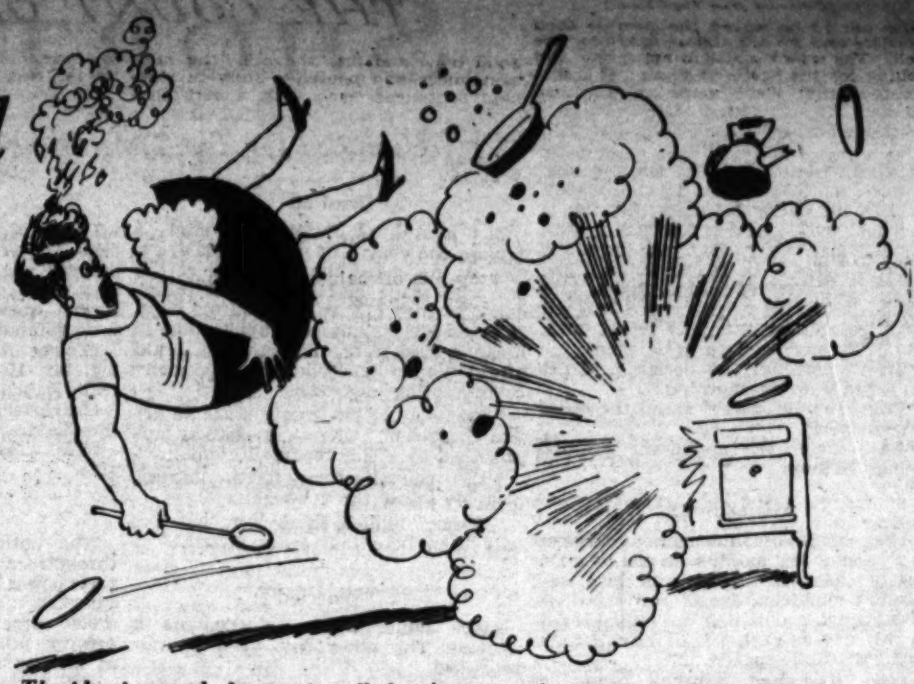
The Pleasures of Coney Island

By P. G. Wodehouse



The idea is sound. It contains all the elements of a genuine Coney Island success.

IN THE days of the Spanish Inquisition, one of the assistant torturers was chatting with Torquemada during a matinee performance in the deepest dungeon beneath the castle moat.

"We aren't doing so well as we used to," said this worthy fellow. "I'm not kept busy at all nowadays—not what I call busy."

"I think," said Torquemada, "that the supply of heretics must be giving out."

"It isn't that," replied the other. "The trouble is that our methods are all wrong. What happens, for instance, if we want to put a fellow on the rack? Why, we go out and arrest him and try him in prison first, and all that. What we ought to do is to charge a small admission fee, change the name of the rack to "Stretching the Stretch" or something, and before you know where you are, we should be turning them away."

Well, Torquemada paid no attention to the man, partly because he himself was a conservative in his views and partly because it would have been beneath the dignity of the Head of the Inquisition to accept advice from an underling. And look at the result! Who ever hears of the Spanish Inquisition nowadays? What dividends does it pay? It has failed, simply because it was run without any understanding of the first principles of human nature.

Centuries later, along came Coney Island, run on the lines suggested by the above-mentioned thinker, and it is doing a great business.

The principle at the bottom of Coney Island's success is the eminently sound one that what would be a brutal assault, if administered gratis, becomes a rollicking, pleasure, when charged for at the rate of 15 cents per assault.

Suppose somebody laid hands upon you and put you in a large round tub. Suppose he then proceeded to send the tub spinning down an incline so arranged that at intervals of a few feet it spun round and bumped violently into something. Next day he would hear from your lawyer. But at Coney Island you jump into the Virginia Reel and enjoy it. You have to enjoy it, because you have paid good money to do so.

To one who, like myself, has never invented anything more elaborate than an excuse for getting out of a dull dinner party, the most amazing thing about Coney Island is the apparently effortless way in which those in charge think up new attractions every year. I picture them as rather grim, melancholy men. In early life they have had some disappointment, and this has soured them. They do not love their species, but the law prevents their revenging themselves on mankind by any simple and direct process, so they have to invent attractions. When they devise something which must inevitably produce dyspepsia, nervous breakdown and heart failure in the victim, they are happy. They meet at a special club, of their own.

"The lawyers got away with all my money during my minority," says one, "but I have invented an attraction which jerks you up and sideways at the same time and squirts water in your face."

"My wife eloped with the chauffeur in the summer of 1913," says the other, "but look at the new one I have invented." You pay 15 cents and drop through a trapdoor onto a lot of spikes."

Being in America, Coney Island is thought a little vulgar. If it were in France, we should have had writers pointing out how essentially refined the Tickler and the Human Roulette Wheel were, and with what abandon and polish the French populace took its pleasures.

To the thinking man, the great charm of Coney Island is the feeling of confidence it gives that the heart of the nation is sound and that, though we may be unprepared for war, we could nevertheless be depended on to render a good account of ourselves, should the necessity arise. We may have a small army and navy, but it would be a rash power that would dare to set foot on the soil of a country whose inhabitants can consume hot dogs and ice cream cones, wash them down with iced soda pop, and then go off and submit smiling to the Aerial Slide and the Barrel of Love. We should like to see a regiment of Uhlans tackle the Virginia Reel! They would have the white flag out before the tub had done its second bump.

Again, Coney Island's system of combination tickets might solve Broadway's problem of theatrical depression. Think of central offices where one could buy a combination ticket for all the theaters! Theatergoing would cease to be a gamble. For example, if you didn't like the play at the Gaiety, you could leave and go to the Astor, and so on till you picked a winner.

Before I forget, it seems that the explosion from the neighborhood of the kitchen, which I heard as I was writing my last paragraph, was the cook having a few difficulties with the oven. My wife reports that our faithful Swede, underestimating the volume of gas in the stove, set her front hair and part of her dress on fire, was exploded to the ceiling, and is now in hysterics: I cannot conclude an article on Coney Island without suggesting this brand-new idea to the promoters. I look forward to seeeing, on my next visit there, the great new attraction, The Oven of Joy. The idea is sound. It contains all the elements of a genuine Coney Island success. It makes a lot of noise, it throws you in the air, and it nearly kills you. Price 15 cents.

Old "Shoots" were Tough on Turkey

The custom of holding "turkey shoots" still prevails in many parts of the country. They are a reminder of one of the forms of diversion which were practiced among the early settlers but they are now somewhat changed in form. In the old days the turkey was the target and often the birds experienced a pretty hard time before they were finally killed. This is according to an old New Englander who has attended many of the shoots. He says: "The birds today may be as tough as those upon the tree stumps as targets and prizes seventy years ago, but their skins and nerves are not put to so prolonged and cruel a test. The modern turkey shoot in the Midwest has inanimate targets, not live birds tied to a tree stump nine rods away. In the '60s, according to the rules of the game, the live turkey remained a target so long as he 'could stand up or fly a rod.' Those birds with flesh of iron 'absorbed shot like cornmeal and occasionally survived fifteen or twenty of the cruel firings.'"

Werewolves of the Waves

By George Wycherley Kirkman

The Thrilling Adventures of One of the Earliest Arctic Explorers and His Harrowing Experience in the Straits of Magellan.

Sir Thomas Cavendish.

OF ALL the distinguished sea captains that lent glory to the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the flower of the flock (to my mind) was Mr. John Davis of Sandridge, Devonshire—for in his single person he united more admirable qualities as a gentleman, a progressive and humane Englishman, and an able mariner than any other famous sailor of that age. He was one of the very first Arctic explorers, and rediscovered the Falkland Islands. A very able and scientific navigator, he invented nautical instruments, and wrote a standard textbook on navigation. For he was a well-educated man, and a ready, graphic and truthful writer, who published two books in 1595—and such was the fame of his cruises and explorations, that Hakluyt published three books of his; and Purchas wrote up two of his voyages to the East Indies.

Honest and amiable, considerate and kindly, he was beloved by his sailors (a rarity, then) and was trusted by his backers or superiors. Iron will, steady perseverance, dauntless resolution, cool courage, great sagacity and shrewd horse-sense were his; he also was a highly daring adventurer, and a brave captain in battle, quite capable of desperate gallantry. A perfect pilot, he thirsted to sail to distant lands—and his most ardent desire was to discover unknown countries or islands.

Early to sea, he received a complete nautical training. Among other voyages, he sailed in 1582 with Fenton's California-bound expedition. His neighbors and boyhood playmates were Sir Humphrey Gilbert and his brothers, Sir John and Adrian Gilbert, also Sir Walter Raleigh, a half-brother of the Gilberts. Inheriting his paternal estate of Sandridge, Davis married Faith, daughter of Sir John Fulford of Fulford and his wife, Lady Dorothy Bourchier, daughter of the Earl of Bath. The feasibility of finding the fabled Northwest Passage—a short cut from the Atlantic to the Pacific—was often discussed by Davis with the Gilberts—Sir Humphrey Gilbert's essay on this passage having been printed in 1578—and in 1583 Queen Elizabeth granted a patent giving the right to make discovery of a short cut to China and The Spice Islands (Moluccas) to Adrian Gilbert and his associates, "The Colleagues of The Fellowship for the Discovery of the Northwest Passage."

The London and west country merchants believed in this passage, and were anxious (for commercial purposes) to find it—because they knew that Frobisher's three expeditions had been largely devoted to hunting for mines of gold and silver, instead of searching for the passage. So these merchants now got up another expedition; and upon Adrian Gilbert's recommendation, Mr. John Davis was appointed the leader and chief pilot of it. It was composed of two cockleshells—for Arctic exploration!—the Sunshine of fifty tons, carrying twenty-three men, including four musicians and Mr. John Janes, a merchant and devoted friend of Davis and nephew of Mr William Sanderson, a wealthy London merchant, who backed Davis in many of his voyages. The other vessel was the Moonshine—a fitting name—of thirty-five tons, with a crew of seventeen men; but there was no moonshine about the account of this voyage of Arctic exploration that Janes later wrote up for publication.

Off to sea these cockboats sailed on June 7, 1585, crossed the Atlantic, rounded the south end of Greenland, and bravely steered due north, along the western coast of Greenland, where the superstitious sailors shuddered at "a mighty great roaring of the sea," due to "the rowling together of islands of ice" (icebergs) that appalled these early Arctic explorers. Davis now discovered and entered the straits later named Davis Straits, after him. The opposite coast (Labrador) appeared so desolate, that he named it The Land of Desolation. He discovered Cumberland Strait, where thirty-seven canoeloads of Esquimaux came to view his ship—from a safe distance. Noting their timidity, Davis had his four musicians play merry tunes, to which the English sailors danced on the decks of the Sunshine and Moonshine, all the while making signs of friendship to the natives.

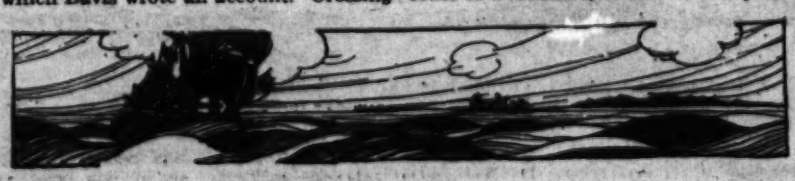
This stratagem won the natives' hearts; as they were honest and tractable people—but idolaters "who worship the sunne." On the west side of the straits, Davis came to a brave mountain, "the cliffs whereof are as orient as golde"—so he called it Mt. Raleigh—after which he went on north, and met four giant white bears "of a monstrous bignesse," and valiantly slew one of them. He sailed to 64 degrees 15 minutes North Latitude on the west coast of Greenland; and on the mainland of America nearly 9 degrees further north than Cabot had. It was time to return; so he coasted south, doubled the "Cape of God's Mercy," and got back to England on September 29.

"Pooh! No passage, no pounds sterling for another Arctic voyage!" said the canny London merchants; but the west country ones backed up Davis. The Exeter merchants hired the Mermaid of 120 tons (at £100 a month) to accompany him on a second voyage in the Sunshine and the Moonshine, to find the Northwest Passage. A ten-ton pinnace, the North Star, was the fourth vessel in Davis's squadron.

Out to sea they sailed from Dartmouth on May 7, 1586, on this Arctic voyage, of which Davis wrote an account. Crossing the Atlantic, he discovered Cape Farewell, the southern tip of Greenland. Seeing this, he sent the Sunshine and the North Star to explore the eastern coast of Greenland; while he ascended its west coast, meeting and trafficking with numerous natives in canoes for sealskins and dried fish. But the English opined that they were idolaters, because they wore images—also they apparently were "witches," dealing in various "enchantments." But they were both husky and nimble; rivalling the English in leaping, and even beating these famous west country "rasslers" at wrestling, to the latters' vast surprise!

Davis sailed on north into the Arctic Sea, meeting huge masses of ice and cold that froze the ropes, shrouds and sails on the vessels. Fog, hail and mist also bewildered and terrified his simple sailors—so they wanted to go home, especially those of the Mermaid, who so disgusted Davis that he let her leave him and return to England, while he boldly carried on, alone, in the little Moonshine of only thirty-five tons! He passed the entrance to Hudson Straits, and then coasted south, along the Labrador coast, where his crew caught a huge quantity of big codfish, which they salted down and took home, arriving early in October.

Meanwhile, the Sunshine and North Star sailed northward up the eastern coast of Greenland, in search of a possible passage through it; and they actually got up to 80 degrees North Latitude on this coast. Thence they sailed to Iceland, met fixed ice, and then sailed back home; only to encounter a terrible storm on September 3, during which the little North Star disappeared from the view of the Sunshine—and nevermore was she seen or heard of. The Sunshine got back safely—but Davis still hoped to find the passage; and he tried to find backers not discouraged by the lack of any profit from these two Arctic voyages of his.



Some of the big codfish had been sent to the Lord Treasurer, as a present and a sample of Labrador's commercial possibilities—a naive scheme of honest John Davis!—so these codfish allured Davis's firm friend, Mr. William Sanderson of London (one of his former backers) to stake him to a third Arctic voyage. The clinker Helena of London was sent for his use in the Arctic; while the Sunshine and the Elizabeth were to stop at Labrador and load up there with codfish, so as to thus earn somewhat to repay the adventurers for the expenses of this voyage.

Davis sailed off with this squadron on May 19, 1587; and leaving these codfishers at Labrador, he sailed up into the Arctic in this little pinnace, Helena, and reached on June 30, 1587, that lofty headland (near Upernivik) in 72 degree, 41 seconds North Latitude, which he named "Sanderson, his Hope"—finding here a sea open to both the north and west of it. He viewed Frobisher Strait, discovered and entered Baffin's Bay, and named Cape Chidley, the southern point of the entrance to Hudson Strait. So John Davis certainly was some discoverer, when he got to going good—and remember, he did all this in the Arctic in a little ten-ton pinnace! A sufficient commentary on this fearless explorer, alone in the Arctic Sea, in such a tiny fragile craft!

Davis returned to Labrador, only to find that the craven codfish-catchers had skipped out to England, instead of waiting for him, as per agreement—so he had to sail across the Atlantic alone in this tiny boat; but he arrived safely at Dartmouth on September 15, 1587. By his discoveries in the Arctic, he won himself great fame as a resolute explorer. And his reputation as one of the greatest sailors and most scientific navigators of that age was increased now by his publication of his famous work—"The World's Hydrographical Description"—a mariner's manual, which was so popular that is was republished eight years later. Also his reports about the abundance of whales off Greenland led to its enduring and profitable whale-fishery, for which the world is indebted to him.

Next year, 1588, witnessed the attempt of The Invincible Armada of Spain to help the Spanish invasion of England; and like all other English sailors and sea captains, doubtlessly Capt. John Davis did his duty nobly, in their glorious victory over that immense Armada in the English Channel. After which he went to sea on a commercial voyage; only to have his ship and cargo captured by a privateer of the Catholic League of France—although England then was at peace with that nation. This so infuriated Davis, that he now went on a buccaneering cruise against the ships of Catholic France and Spain—his two vessels being apparently furnished by his friend, William Sanderson of London, whose friend and relative by marriage, Sir Walter Raleigh, also sent out a ship named The Barke of Lime (Lima) under Capt. Maresburie to buccaneer at sea against the Dons, in company with Davis's armed vessels.

In August, 1589, these two English captains and their vessels joined the Earl of Cumberland's buccaneering squadron in the Azores; and according to the account of this famous cruise, Davis participated in the ensuing land battles and sea-fights with extraordinary bravery and perfect handling of his men and vessels, especially in the furious fight at Santa Maria Island, where Davis in an open boat with his sailors boarded, captured and tried to carry off a grounded Spanish ship, amid a tremendous hail of Portuguese cannonballs and musketry, also cursed he waved the men to their corners and we are almost ready for the bell. The crowd is still in an uproar and yelling for the battle to begin. It is understood that Webb made an insulting remark about young Londos's sick brother which precipitated the attack.

"It looks as if it will be a great fight. There goes the bell!"

I thought of the words leaving the air in the bedroom of Willie Hennigan. What a message to that dying boy. Then I came to kick away the stool and pushed Eddie to battle. He went forward in a rush. Webb met him in the middle of the ring. Fists reached home in a flurry of blows.

Before I or my seconds had got into a crouch below our corner, Eddie had been beaten to the floor by two well timed blows that were accurate and hard. He was hurt, but not out. He took a count of eight, then, covering, got up.

Smiling and licking cauterized lips, the Spider was on him. He lashed out. Smack! Smack! One, two. A gash on the right cheek, another on the left. The blows jarred the kid to his heels. Blood spurted from the cuts.

Webb grinned. Then again—one, two! On both of the kid's temples blue welts came to life. Smack! and blood spurted from a deep gash under the left eye. It swelled rapidly and soon would close. Smack! Smack! A heavy blow to the ribs, another to the heart. Eddie doubled up, his face contorted in pain.

"So you're Hennigan's brother, eh!" Webb was cruel in his triumph. He straightened the kid with a wicked uppercut which almost lifted him from the floor.

Eddie Londos shuffled backward, the Spider grinning and shuffling after him. He trapped him in a corner and was cutting him at will when the bell rang.

It was manslaughter. In the entire round Eddie Londos had not landed a solid blow and into the mike the radio announcer had poured a story in staccato sentences, each with a barb that would stab pain into Willie Hennigan's dying flesh.

THE COUNT OF TEN

I was mad. "You poor sap," I yelled into the kid's chopped-up face as we worked over him in the corner. "You get out there and fight! Stop taking them on the chin. Fight! Rush this has-been off his feet! Keep rushing him—keep him off balance. Fight him!

"Keep swinging at him till you drop. Throw everything you've got. Do you hear? You got to do it, kid. Willie's listening to you, hear? Willie's listening and he's dying. He won't live the night. This'll kill him. Fight! Do you hear? Fight!"

The bell rang and I pushed him out. He went out crying. "At him," I yelled. "Tear him apart! Knock that stupid grin off his face!"

Eddie went at Webb in a whirlwind of action. Stop him? He was like an explosive. He threw fists from all directions. Webb, puzzled, covered up. The kid aimed one high. Webb lifted his guard, and sock! Eddie crashed into his belt line. Webb grunted, hurt, and covered up again. Eddie came up with a beautiful uppercut and Webb staggered back, then bent forward to hold on. He was hurt, hurt badly.

Eddie side-stepped and let fly a right cross. It was perfectly timed. Webb went down, but was up in a second. Sock!

The kid sent home another, and Webb was glassy-eyed and befogged. The crowd was on its feet, the stadium in a roar. This wasn't Eddie Londos fighting. This was the Willie Hennigan of yore.

Suddenly Webb reached forward and held on for dear life. Eddie had tried and missed a fierce blow. I realized the words of Willie: "What's left of me will be here, but all that I used to be will be in the ring helping you batter that human louse." The referee was trying to tear them apart. The kid was covered with Webb's blood and anxious to sock. The crowd was yelling for a knockout.

Webb twisted and turned, but held grimly on.

By the mike the announcer was yelling himself hoarse. Suddenly the referee got Webb free and Eddie stepped back. Webb's knees were still shaky, his body sheer jello. Eddie lunged forward and the impact was a crash.

Webb sank against the ropes, then bounded slowly back.

They were near our corner directly over the mike.

I was yelling like a madman, confused at the change. Here was Eddie Londos, the punk of them all, set for a kill when but a round before he had been chopped to ground meat. A tiger he seemed now, yet cool for a kill. As Webb rode toward him by the spring of the ropes, he sidestepped the outstretched hands and sent home a left. It was to Webb's belly and he bent forward head down. With the swiftness of light the kid came back with an uppercut which lifted Webb half through the ropes.

He was out, cold as a fish.

His body seemed to hang in the air a second; there were warning shouts below, but before any one could get clear Webb shot down. There was a crash heard above the roar of the crowd; the crash of furniture, the tearing of wood, followed by the thud of two bodies. I leaped up and around. Webb was out cold, bloody body stretched grotesquely like a drunk's, and beneath him was the radio announcer, knocked away from his mike, and likewise unconscious.

The place was a madhouse. Only the referee seemed calm, and Webb's seconds, who rushed to his side and pushed him into the ring. They held ammonia to his nose and doused him with water, but he was too far gone.

"Eight," I heard, then "Nine," and then "Ten."

Eddie Londos's hand was pulled up and I jumped into the ring.

"What happened?" he gasped as I led him to his corner where below men were bent over the still unconscious announcer.

"You won, you won, kid—You fought like a fool."

I slapped his face. He blinked his eyes. "I what?" he said.

"You won by a knockout, second round."

He gasped, then smiled and pressed my hand. "Willie," he said—"won't Willie be glad?"

Then I thought of the mike. Nobody had given the verdict. I hustled Eddie out of the ring. "Here," I told him. "Willie don't know it yet. This guy was kayoed too. Tell Willie. Lean into it." I pointed to the mike in its cigar-box-like hood.

There was a sob in his voice as he leaned forward and talked. "I did it, Willie, I did it. I knocked him out in the second round."

Then, as if leaving a phone, Eddie Londos said to his brother, "Good-by, Willie."

Twenty minutes later I was talking to Roy Brown, over the phone. He was crying. So was I.

"Willie's gone, kid," Roy said. "Went out of his head and fought the whole second round. Then he suddenly came to. Then next thing Eddie is talking and telling he won. He just lay back, white and weak, but smiling. Gee, kid, it was sad but honest—it was beautiful. Eddie says, 'Good-by, Willie,' and just like they're together, he says, 'Good-by,' too, and—hell, I'm crying—he just—well, he just died."

I heard him click off and sat there numbly trying to figure it out.

Werewolves of the Waves

which never fazed the dauntless Davis. Davis stayed with the Earl until nearly the end of this cruise; and then sailed back to England, by the Earl's orders, with two captured prizes.

Romance and high adventure were in Davis's Devon blood—in fact, his whole life was just one thrilling adventure after another—and evidently this buccaneering cruise with the Earl now allured Davis into joining Sir Thomas Cavendish in the latter's second buccaneering voyage, whose destination was California. But Davis was chiefly tempted to go on this cruise by his avid desire to visit new and distant lands and seas—and he not only invested heavily (for him) in this enterprise but also induced his old friend Adrian Gilbert to equip and send along with Cavendish's squadron a small bark, the Daintie.

The news that Cavendish was about to sail to California again, in quest of another noble treasure-galleon, brought him ample backing and numerous gentlemen-adventurers; so Cavendish sailed from Plymouth bound for California, on August 26, 1591, with "three tall ships and two barks"—the galleon Leicester, flagship, captained by Sir Thomas Cavendish, admiral and general of the squadron; Cavendish's former ship, the old Desire, captained by John Davis, rear-admiral; the Roebucke, captained by M. Cocke, vice-admiral; the Daintie, Capt. Randolfe Cotton, and the pinnace Black Prince, Capt. Tobie—the squadron being manned by 400 men, according to John Janes, who accompanied Davis on this voyage, out of love for him, and wrote a graphic account of it.

This squadron of buccaneers arrived at Salvador Bay on the Coast of Brazil on November 29, where Cavendish presently captured a Portuguese bark from the Rio de la Plata with a cargo of sugar and Negro slaves. Its master piloted Cavendish to the Isle of Placencia, where he looted its seven houses, and then sailed to the Isle of San Sebastian whence Cavendish sent Cocke and Davis in the Black Prince and the Desire to the town of Santos, chiefly to secure provisions, of which the squadron was now in great need.

Next day, these worthies landed in the early morn at Santos and made prisoners of its inhabitants, all of whom were just then attending early mass in its church—in which Cocke kept them under guard. Delighted at this feat, he got drunk and allowed the townsfolks' Indian servants to carry off everything they wanted—but he made no attempt to lay hands upon the provisions so sorely needed by the squadron. In fact, this mincompoop released the townfolk and let them carry away all the food and valuables in Santos. So when Cavendish arrived here, he was unable to obtain food for love or money—and so great was his need of it, that on January 22, 1592, he had to sail away, in search of some.

A great storm scattered these ships over the ocean; but one by one they arrived at Port Desire on the Patagonian coast; save the Daintie, whose crew mutinied and sailed her back to England, during a visit of her captain to the Roebucke. This shipless captain, Cotton, boarded the Desire, as he was a great friend of Davis; and Cavendish also boarded this vessel, when the galleon Leicester arrived at Port Desire, on March 18—for Cavendish damned the many gentlemen on the galleon, saying they were "hell-hounds," and wanted to run everything.

Sailing southward, they entered the Straits of Magellan, doubled Cape Forward, and thus were half way through these stormy straits—only to be driven into a cove by a tempest that detained them there for weeks, beset by storms, cold, snow and a famine that forced them to devour mussels and even seaweeds. Forty men died, seventy were desperately ill! and not over fifty men were able to stand upright.

They persuaded Cavendish to return to Brazil to get some food, and then return to these straits. Sullenly Cavendish sailed out of the straits and northward along Patagonia. But when athwart of Port Desire, Cavendish in the Leicester, followed by the Roebucke, got separated one night from the Desire and the Black Prince.

Cavendish sailed northward; but Davis (as rear-admiral) took the Black Prince and the Desire into Port Desire, to wait for Cavendish there. Davis was in a bad fix, as the Desire was in no shape to go to sea. But his men all ate mussels; and "with hookes made of pinnes" they caught lots of smelt.

Davis wanted to go in the pinnace northward to find Cavendish, but there were "two most pestilent fellowes," Smith and Parker, who objected to Davis's going off and leaving the mariners here "to be devoured by the cannibals." So these two villains plotted with the crew to murder Davis and his friends, some dark night. As these superstitious seamen deemed him a wizard, who could only be slain with silver bullets, they melted up some silver and molded silver bullets. But the boatswain revealed this sinister plot to Davis, who investigated these actions of "these two most murtherous fellowes"; although, for policy's sake, he dare not punish their rascality. He merely said to them: "The Lord judge between you and mee!"

"In peril of famine and in danger of murthering," Davis had his men repair the Desire, salt down twenty hogsheads of seal meat at Penguin Island, and sailed for Magellan Straits. On August 14, 1592, he "discovered" the Falkland Islands, of which he had never heard—after which he sailed into Magellan Straits and got half-way through them, to a cove peopled by many savages. It was intensely cold, "yet all these wilde people go naked, and live in the woods like satyrs, painted and disguised; and (they) flie from you like wilde deere," but threw four-pound stones at the English from an incredible distance, so strong were they.

The Desire's master had been on her during Cavendish's previous voyage to California; so, as the seal meat rotted, he advised Davis not to wait here longer for Cavendish, but to sail on to Santa Maria Island on the Chile coast, where they could find food and a better climate. As the men were dying of cold or starvation, Davis sailed out of the straits into the South Pacific on September 13, 1592, only to be driven back into them, next day, by a furious storm. The Desire had only one set of worn-out sails; yet Davis again sailed out into the Pacific. A howling gale drove him back into the straits, as his threadbare sails could not stand the strain. His only cables snapped; he lost an anchor, and now had only one left, with a broken fluke.

"But if we returne, there is nothing to be hoped for but death" said the master—so dauntless Davis entered the Pacific, for the third time; and this time he got clear of the land, and now pointed his prows toward California. But that night a terrible storm from the west hurled him back, sank the Black Prince with all hands, and drove the Desire at headlong speed eastward through the straits, after being "at the very pinch of death." His men, half-mad with terror, forced him now to sail for Port Desire, ere the dread "Demon of Cape Horn" destroy them. So on "a hell-darke nighte," Davis steered the Desire through that tortuous channel, which he had mapped and memorized.

Here Davis salted down 14,000 penguins at Penguin Island, for food on their way home; and here Parker, Smith and seven other men, who insisted on walking on the mainland to Port Desire evidently were captured by the Patagonian Indians, as they never were seen more. These savages also tried to set fire to the Desire, but were driven off by musket-fire. Davis sailed to Placencia Island off Brazil, anchoring there on January 30, 1593—and here the Portuguese and Indians massacred thirteen of a shore-party. Davis now sailed for England; but the penguins rotted and bred huge worms that devoured the food, ate the men's clothes, then ate into the ship's timbers, and even tried to eat the men—so they dared not go to sleep! Some men went mad; others died of starvation; so when Davis arrived at Beerhaven, Ireland, he had only sixteen men left out of his original crew of seventy-six.

Meanwhile, Cavendish had sailed up the Brazil coast with the Leicester and the Roebucke, only to have the latter desert him here and return to England, after fifty Englishmen of these ships had been slain or captured by the Portuguese. This final blow finished Cavendish, who now was ill and "heart-broken." Vainly he sought an alleged desert isle, intending to remain there and die, rather than return to England as a pauper. But he died in mid-ocean; his crew sailed the Leicester back to England—and this was the end of that particular expedition bound for California. But if John Davis had only had a set of good sails, he surely would have made it, and doubtlessly have captured a rich Manila galleon off "the Californias." For if John Davis was anything, he certainly was a sure-fire go-getter; but though he "set every threadbare sail," yet the fearful storms of the Demon of the Cape were too much for even him.

His Strumming for Melody of Evenings Woke the Babies

Dream Waltz

By FANNIE HURST

WHEN Leonard was twenty-one, he composed a Dream Waltz. It was published, caught on, and for a considerable while the entire land was dancing to it and humming.

Incidentally, it made quite a pile of money for Leonard, enabling him to plan a trip to Greece, there to satisfy some sort of a congenital hunger in his Middle-West soul, to say nothing of the fact that, for at least a six-month, he was quite a celebrity. His home town honored him; even New York bowed to him upon his arrival there to take ship, and for one brief second in his scheme of things, the gods took notice of a lean gangling fellow with a shock of blond hair, who hailed from a town called Granite City, and through whose commonplace-looking cranium had waited the haunting melody of a dream.

Everywhere he went for those few months, the melody went with him, following him like a wisp of lovely smoke. In restaurants, when he entered, the orchestra played him his Dream Waltz; on dance floors, youth, with drugged-looking eyes, moved rhythmically to it. Even on street corners, barrel organs sent his Dream Waltz tumbling into the street din. They were short, excited melodious months, dominated by the subtle aura of success.

It was in New York, while waiting to take the ship for the Aegean Islands, that he met a slip of a girl from Brooklyn endowed with the absurdly incongruous and beautiful name of Hesper. She was a flat-voiced, satin-skinned, colloquial, quick-minded, city-turned little piece, one of hordes who milled through the daily scene, but to Leonard, from the moment he clapped eyes on her seated on a high stool beside him at an ice cream counter, a nymph who must have slipped out of the surf of the ocean surrounding Manhattan.

Their courtship was quick, citified and ended in marriage. The trip to the Aegean, of course, was shelved, first because Hesper preferred to purchase Grand Rapids furniture with the money and secondly, because any spot she chose to be, became the Aegean Isles to Leonard.

They were married on a Monday, had fitted up a pert little filing-cabinet of a flat by the following Monday, and in another week were neatly adjusted into the well-oiled routine of the butcher, the baker, the frigidaire de-froster; the dumb waiter, the subway, the vermin exterminator.

Nor was the transition of hopes and plans difficult for Leonard. Hesper was more delectable, if possible, in marriage than she had been in courtship. Built like a doll, her quick pink tongue, her darting adorably wayward eye her flashing little temper, her irresistible remorse were as elusive, as maddening, as appetizing to him, as had been the elusive strains of his waltz before he captured them all.

For a twelvemonth they lived, these two children, captured into the cave of their Manhattan flat, the deliciously irresponsible, uninhibited lives of playboy and playgirl.

Then the funds gave out, the vogue of the Dream Waltz began to go the way of all vogues, and life began to become the serious business it can manage to be upon occasion.

What subsequently happened, came much more gradually than it seems in the telling. The first dimming of the luster of the vivaciousness that was Hesper's did not come until those first strangely solemn days when it became necessary for the little household, builded on the Dream Waltz, to sit solemnly down and take note of its budget. And then, almost before they could catch their breath over the narrow margin of their resources, Hesper's twin girls were born and ten months thereafter, a boy, and ten months after that, another.

Thereupon, this story takes its all too usual course. The gradual conflict of wear and tear, worry and financial strain upon beauty, youth and hope. For almost a year, battling with the haunting desires for melody that still lay tormented in the hinterlands of his mind, Leonard, borrowing, devising, scheming to meet his budget, strove to recapture some of the quality that had poured into the Dream Waltz.

At the end of fourteen months, he was clerking in a haberdashery. At the end of five years, he was clerking in a haberdashery.

With a finality that struck terror to his soul, his house had settled, his Hesper had settled, his routine had settled.

A bitter, slatternly, violently maternal Hesper ruled his household now.

It mattered not that when she met him, Hesper, at ten dollars a week, had been salesgirl in the basement of a department store. The years, piling up their woes and disappointments, also piled up in the wife of Leonard, festering hallucinations of having sacrificed herself.

Strangely, there was no repudiation in Leonard. What Hesper said of him in vituperative moods, was true. He had brought no fulfillment to his marriage. His promise, his inspiration, his melody of spirit, had petered out. Hesper, who thought she had married success, had married a clerk.

It hurt Leonard to see her beauty fade out beneath the lines of bitterness, and to know that the lugging of her heavy children was dragging her figure into swayback lines.

Even the old struggle for composition was gone. With the enforced sale of his upright piano, he had for a few months locked himself up evenings to try and strum for melody on a battered guitar. That woke the babies. The slow corroding processes of frustration began to eat into the heart of Leonard.

At forty, gray and with a stoop, he was any morning the strap-hanger caught in the obscene shambles of the subway eight o'clock rush; he was any flat dweller, turning his pasty face homeward at six o'clock, once more a wedged sardine in the evening subway rush; a qualified member of the routinized world of the flat, the shop, the daily grind.

Sunday mornings he wheeled out his babies, cleaned out his pipes, tinkered with a home-made radio, buried his face under sheets of the Sunday papers to escape the perpetual wranglings of Hesper, who wore dust caps and her skirts pulled up around her hips while she did housework.

Sunday afternoons, particularly as his boys began to grow up, he walked with them to the zoos of the public parks or occasionally took them skiff-riding on the small lakes. His neck had grown thin, his arms had grown more gangling, his eyes had grown to look like glass that had been breathed on.

Yet withal, the man out of whom had flowered the mystic sweetness of the Dream Waltz, moved ahead in the trance of his life. Husband of a wife. Father of children. Head of a household. Incumbent of a clerk's position. Taxpayer on a tiny scale. Subscriber to a morning newspaper. Tinkerer with his radio. Absorber of the ready-made propaganda of the political and social world in which he lived.

Any man on Any Street in Any Town. Middle man. Average man. Man in the Street.

His twins grew older and more demanding and more critical of the parent who had thus thrust them into ways of mediocrity, when at school there were children who came from larger flats, and wore better frocks. His boys grew older, and in many respects, terrifyingly wise in city ways. His wife grew dimmer and more the scold.

And yet, to all intents and purposes,

Killing With Kindness

By Bruce Barton

RECENTLY a young couple were subjected to the ordeal of a fashionable church wedding, and started joyously on their honeymoon.

They were a nice boy and girl. His only idea was to find a job at the bottom of some good business where he could carve out a career for himself. She had dreams of making a little home, keeping him happy, listening in the evening to the story of his day's adventures, and helping him by her love and enthusiasm to be a real success.

They had only one drawback, or rather six drawbacks: two sets of wealthy parents and two very rich old aunts.

While they were away the two aunts had an inspiration. They looked around secretly in the most expensive part of the city and picked out a swell apartment. They employed the highest-priced interior decorator and gave generous orders at the leading furniture stores.

When the couple came back to town they were met by all four parents and the two doting old maids. In a big limousine they were whisked up to the apartment. The lights were switched on. The older people waited expectantly for the exclamations of joy that would greet the splendid lay-out.

Too astonished to say anything, the poor little rich children gazed about them. Then suddenly the bride covered her face with her hands and burst into a flood of tears.

The older people thought that they were tears of joy. In clumsy fashion they began to comfort her, to tell her that what they had given her was nothing in comparison with what they would like to do.

Being a well-bread young lady, the bride did not disillusion them. She mumbled some conventional words of thanks and held herself under control until they had gone.

She could not tell them—and they would not have understood—that they had done the cruelest thing imaginable; that they had destroyed her dream and robbed her of one of life's sweetest pleasures. They had tried to be so very kind, and they succeeded only in taking from her the joyful right of every girl to fix up her own little home for herself.

Most of us run no danger of hurting our children in the same degree. We are, fortunately, too poor to rob them very much.

Yet all parents need to be on guard a bit in this prosperous land. Let us have the good sense not to kill with kindness.

Let us give our kids a chance to enjoy the same grand pleasures which we enjoyed—the pleasure of selecting their own mates, making their own homes, and fighting their way up by themselves.

A BALCONY FARCE

An Episode in the Married Life of Helen and Warren

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

Creator of the "Helen and Warren" Characters

"DEAR, will you need your sweater? I'm taking our raincoats."

"Eh?" Warren at the desk, intent on a road map of Southern Germany.

"Will you want your sweater?" patiently.

"Where in blazes is Regensburg?" his pencil poised. "Not on this darn map."

"Please, dear!" persisted Helen. "We've never really motored over here. I don't know what we'll need."

"Here it is!" a triumphant stab. "Just below Nuremberg. Eh? Better take something warm. You're so set on an open car."

"Why, we want the air!" wedging in his green sweater. "I'll sit in front with the driver. Then I won't have to be entertaining."

"Okay!" unflattering lack of protest. "Guess Granville and I'll have plenty to talk about."

Helen's thrilled anticipation! Driving from Frankfort to Munich. Stopping at all the quaint old towns.

A trip planned last year—now a realization! The independence of a motor. Free to get off the tourist routes.

Starting in the morning. Their trunk to be sent on by rail. Anxious selections for the two suit cases—only what they'd really need.

"Dear, your bathrobe's so bulky. Can't you use your overcoat?"

"Here's Rothenburg," still poring over the map. "Eh? Guess so. Ought to stop there overnight. Finest medieval town in Europe."

"Think of the antique shops!" glowing visions of unexplored marts. "If only he comes! You don't suppose—"

"He'll turn up," lighting his pipe. "You can count on Granville."

But Helen's undercurrent of worry. Again scanning the wire received at the Hamburg dock.

MEET YOU AT FRANKFORT WEDNESDAY READY TO START THURSDAY MORNING LOOKING FORWARD TO TRIP

Expecting him all day. After ten now.

"Dear, I'll call down again. Why not? There may be another porter on."

Crossing to the telephone between the beds.

"Hello? The head porter, please . . . Is Mr. Granville from London registered here yet? . . . You'll let us know the minute he comes? . . . . Thank you."

"Why keep hounding 'em?" Warren folding the map. "Said they'd let us know."

"If he shouldn't come—No, I mustn't hold that thought," resolutely optimistic, she turned back to the suit case. "Oh, I almost forgot the camera!"

"Why bother? Postcard views better'n any you can take."

"But I want some of us. And I used all the films on the steamer. I hope the stores are open before we leave!"

"Huh, where d'you think we're going?" he snorted. "Get anything you want in these German towns. Always stock up like we're startin' for the Fiji Islands."

"Dear, you didn't tell me what the car's going to cost."

"Sixty pfennigs a kilometer," with dismissing curtness.

"A kilometer?" hazily. "That's half a mile?"

"Nearer two-thirds," rummaging in his brief case. "Roughly, a mark a mile."

"Twenty-four cents a mile! Dear, isn't that awfully high? How far is it?"

"Darn cheap, to what some of 'em ask. Got a good car and a good man. Now no crabbin' about expenses this trip. That trunk ready to ship off?"

"Yes, but don't lock it yet," laying out their clothes for the morning.

No use waiting any longer for Mr. Granville. Too late to see him, even if he did come tonight.

Wash her hair now. Sticky and unmanageable from the week at sea.

She should have had it done yesterday. But only one day in alluring Hamburg—grudging the time.

Now at the gleaming double washstand. Chipping the fragrant cologne soap for a liquid shampoo.

In the sleeveless freedom of her slip, lathering a frothy white coiffure.

"What the Sam Hill?" Warren glowered up from his Paris paper. "Not washin' your hair this time of night?"

"It won't take long to dry," her eyes shut tight against the stinging soap.

"Always leave everything till the last minute! Well, if Granville doesn't show up pretty soon," with a yawn, "I'm turning in."

Helen soon at the dressing table. Humming with the orchestra from the terrace below as she wielded a drying bath towel.

The triple mirror reflecting the room. The colorful luxury of a German hotel.

The stately old-world atmosphere she always loved. Cream paneled walls, high frescoed ceiling, long windows with crimson hangings.

The beds turned down for the night. Real linen sheets buttoned over the satin comforters. A red-velvet couch behind an oblong table—a favorite arrangement.

Usually a private bath. But the hotel full. Only this or an expensive suite.

"That mop dry?" Warren stretching up from the overstuffed chair.

"Not, quite, dear," spreading out her streaming hair. "Oh, I've an idea!"

Lifting the shade from the desk lamp. Rotating the hot bulb over her head.

"Trust you to rig up some crazy—Hurrah, he's here!" as the telephone tingled. "Hello? . . . Granville? Fine! . . . . . Knew you'd make it somehow . . . Yes, come right on up."

"Not up here! Say you'll be down!" a frantic whisper. "He can't—"

"Why not?" nonchalantly clicking back the instrument.

"With my hair like this?" flinging it from her flushed face.

"Huh, he won't notice how you look. Now we've got to figure out our route."

"Quick, meet him at the lift! Say I've gone to bed—go to his room!"

"All right, needn't hit the ceiling," he grumbled. "Where'd I put that map?"

Her panicky search cut short by a consternating knock.

"No, no—wait!" a breathless whisper.

Snatching the towel, Helen darted out through the open French window.

The next second, crouching in a corner of the narrow stone balcony.

The rumble of Warren's hearty greeting.

"Sorry I couldn't get here this morning," an apologetic response. "Had to stop over at Paris. Got a wire—"

The rest drowned by the striking-up orchestra. The supper hour on the Frankfurter Hof terrace.

Through the stone balustrade a glimpse of the fairy scene below.

Festoons of colored lights. White-clothed, silver-glimmered tables against the green shrubbery. Everywhere huge scarlet geraniums—fringing the terrace and blazoning the hanging baskets.

The dreamy Strauss waltz, the distance-blended voices, the flower-fragrant night—

But for once Helen unstirred by the continental glamour. Shivering discomfort. The chill stone, and her hair still wet.

Drawing closer her inadequate silk negligee. If she should take cold? Be sniffling all the trip?

Swelling resentment. Warren must realize! Why didn't he get him out—go to his room? But no skill at social maneuvers.

Then a tormenting thought! How had he explained her absence? He could say she was down in the lounge or writing room. But would he?

That suite—if only she'd let him take it! But her economy had rebelled at the seventy marks.

The band silent now. Only the splash of the fountain in the square beyond.

"Well, hope we have a clear day tomorrow," the voice petrifyingly near.

Not coming on the balcony? No, no, Warren wouldn't let him—

"Fine view of the terrace here."

A dark figure looming out! Another—Warren following. Standing stolidly before her corner. Trying to shield her.

Trapped! Tremblingly shrinking back against the unyielding stone.

A small balcony. Only the deep shadow screening her.

The white towel so conspicuous! Slipping it under her negligee. Waiting in held-breath panic.

"Yes, going to be clear," looking up at the star-spattered sky.

"Got to make an early start," Warren's propelling hand on his elbow. "We'd better get to bed."

"I'll leave a call for six-thirty," turning from the rail, he dropped his glowing cigarette.

Glancing down to stamp it out—

A paralyzing moment as he stopped short. Had he seen her?

Stepping inside with significant haste.

An indistinct mumble from the room. Then the bang of a closing door.

"Coast's clear!" Warren back at the window.

"Oh, did he see me?" jumping up. "Did he see me?"

"I kept you under cover—shooed him in soon as I could. Of all the sappy stunts! Parked out there on that cold stone—lucky if you don't get pneumonia."

"Why did you ask him up?" quiveringly. "Oh, you never have any consideration for me! Looking like a fright—with my hair all—"

"Why in blazes did you start washing it at this time of night? Now, here's our itinerary. He had it all doped out," scanning a neatly-written schedule. "Going to take in about fifteen towns. First stop tomorrow at Darmstadt. We'll lunch at Speyer—"

"Didn't he ask for me?" tensely. "What did you tell him?"

"Said you'd just stepped out," tugging off his coat. "Sounds queer, eh? Well, I'm not tellin' any lies to cover your fool escapades."

"Dear, if he did see me— Oh, what must he think?"

"Think you were off your nut—and darn right! Now if we take in Regensburg we'll be just four days. That lands us in Munich Sunday night."

"If I could only be sure he didn't see me!" combing out the tangles with wretched pain-indifference.

"Great guns, what if he did?" explosively. "He's not givin' you a thought. Got more important things to worry about. Where're my slippers? Now if you want to enjoy this jaunt, don't be forever thinkin' about yourself and how you look. We're out to lamp the medieval towns—not you!"

doors and planks had been buried in the sandy soil outside the wall so that they formed a broad band, thirty feet deep, right across the front of the wall. The Forofangora were now stepping with bare feet on those needle points set as close as cornstalks, and the effect was distressing. And as they shrieked and milled and formed themselves into a matted mob Savaran, smiling fiercely, leant outward from Mamee Yorga's wall and shot Fodi Kabba, king of the Forofangora, and three of his chiefs as fast as his remarkable pistol could spit bullets. And even before the third shot rang out the front of Mamee Yorga was a blaze of flame. Machine guns and rifles pumped in a continuous blaze into the brown of that milling, tight-packed, helpless mob. In time it was impossible to say how many died so dense was the swathe of dead and living. The shambles that the Forofangora had planned for Mamee Yorga had come to meet them. In twenty minutes there was no more war.

There was a lame, feeble sort of siege for a week or two until word that flotillas were being rushed up river finished even that. It was always half-hearted, never dangerous. The Forofangora ran from Mamee Yorga beaten.

"Those first twenty minutes finished them," Savaran explained to Ruth Dacre. "They taught them that a master was in command, and that there was no hope for them."

Savaran told her this as they stood on the banks of the river by the canoe that was to take him across to Abn Zayd and his expedition waiting on the further bank.

"Savaran!" cried Ruth Dacre huskily. "Stay to enjoy your triumph."

Savaran looked into eyes that told him how personal that triumph might be and he turned quickly to nod at the two stern-wheelers that were disembarking white regiments and artillery on to Mamee Yorga's quay.

"It is wiser for Savaran to go before the official mind remembers there is a reward for his capture."

"They won't do it," she cried. "Why, all Mamee Yorga is petitioning to have you made commissaire."

"Horrible," he grinned. "Imagine Savaran developing a his excellency paunch!"

"That's not Savaran's way," she said, searching his eagle face with overbright eyes. "You are making excuses."

"Possibly," he grinned. "You see, I still think I can get those diamonds."

"Diamonds," she cried scornfully. "Diamonds—Savaran, I am more than diamonds. I—I want you."

"So does young Dr. Felton," said Savaran, grimly. "And I've taken a liking to him—and you're a lovely thing, Ruth, and Savaran is an Ishmael—only fit for diamonds."

He bent and kissed her and sprang into his canoe. And halfway across the stream his fierce grin broke out.

"I wonder," he asked himself, "which of us has made the luckier escape?"

WHAT'S NEW IN SCIENCE

Conducted by Ransome Sutton

Archeologists Reach Interesting Conclusions in the Discovery of Two Uncovered Cities in the Moapa Valley. Laboratory Experimental Work at the University of California Is Responsible for New Tasty Food Products from Surplus Grapes.

This Prehistoric Southwest

IT TAKES a book to tell about the archeological work now going on in this southwest land of lost pueblos, and such a book has just been published by the Southwest Museum. In detail it describes the discoveries made by the field forces of the museum in the Moapa Valley, near the proposed Boulder Dam, including two uncovered cities, their vanished inhabitants, primitive industries and products. Some of the conclusions reached by the archeologists are unusually interesting. The thatch-roofed one-story houses were built of alternate layers of mud and boulders, "Mesa House" being a chain of houses built around a great plaza, or patio, for defensive purposes. Corncobs, kernels of corn and firepits, screw-beans, pottery, weapons and tools, fossils and artifacts, when interpreted by archeologists, tell more about the inhabitants than they knew about themselves. M. R. Harrington has a rich fund of information. Referring to the fact that ground sloths and man apparently existed at the same time, he asks: "Does that mean that man lived here 20,000 or 30,000 years ago —which is the age usually given to the strange society of animals to which the sloths belonged—or does it mean that some of these animals lived on after the glaciers receded, say up to 10,000 or 15,000 years of our time?"

Prof. Charles Schuchert has undertaken to answer this question. Many Pleistocene animals persisted, he thinks, until quite recent times. As a matter of fact, quite a few animals with pedigrees going back to the Pleistocene are alive today. And Dr. Ales Hrdlicka, of the Smithsonian Institution, answers more strongly— that no scrap of evidence has yet been discovered, which proves the presence of mankind in the Americas earlier than 10,000 years B. C. When fossils of men and extinct beasts are found together, it is wiser in view of existing evidence to turn the clock of time ahead for the beasts instead of backward for man.

New Grape Products

THE fruit products laboratory of the University of California, after several years of experimental work, tells us it has finally learned how to turn surplus grapes into tasty food products. "One of these," says Associate Professor W. V. Cruess, "a table syrup made of a blend of Muscat grape juice and other white grape juice, clarified, partially deacidified and concentrated, resembles maple syrup in color and consistency and has a very pleasing Muscat flavor. A second product is a lightly-carbonated blend of Muscat and red grape juices, prepared and bottled by special methods devised by the university specialists."

Other products are "an excellent pure grape soda water of red color and Muscat flavor, powdered grape juice, raisin ice cream, pure grape sherbets, ices and canned grape juice."

Typhoid Vaccine

DESPITE skepticism on the part of some physicians Dr. Joseph Coronia, Giannini professor of research at the California Medical School, declared that typhoid vaccine, properly prepared, shortens the duration of the disease about one half and in almost all cases prevents a fatal outcome. The vaccine is made with typhoid bacilli, and blood from a convalescent typhoid patient. The clear liquid is drawn off, phenolized and used as a vaccine.

Science Serves Religion

THE World's Christian Fundamentals Association, at its recent annual convention in Los Angeles, resolved to "continue the work of preparing text-books on scientific subjects," as a part of a three-year evangelical campaign.

Cross-section sketch showing method of ancient pueblo burial, unearthed by Mr. Harrington.

Cosmic Rays Not Biological

AT A LUNCHEON given by Dr. J. Sevory Hibben of Pasadena to thirty-five distinguished doctors, during the twelfth annual session of the Western School of Physical Therapy, Dr. R. A. Millikan, the guest of honor, discouraged rather than encouraged the hope that cosmic rays possess therapeutic value. "However, up to the present time," he stated, "experiments have been largely limited to an attempt to determine the properties of the rays, without much regard to other values."

A New Type of Alfalfa Harvester

WHILE cutting alfalfa, or other forage crops, this new harvester, invented by E. B. Cushman, crushes the stems between hard rubber rollers. Tried out at the College of Agriculture, University of California, in the presence of representatives of the agronomy, dairy and agricultural engineering divisions, the machine made good. The inventor claims that hay cut and crushed by this machine dries quicker, takes on a better color, holds its vitamins better and is more easily digested than hay harvested in the usual way. The dairy production department is making tests to determine just what effect crushing and quick oxidation have upon the nutrients contained in the hay.

Human Hosts and Queer Guests

PROF. ROBERT HEGNER, whose textbook on zoology is studied in all States except Tennessee, Arkansas and North Carolina, has found that twenty-five different species of protozoa thrive as parasites in human bodies—not all at once however. Most of these tiny denizens are harmless, some beneficial and a few dangerous. Perhaps the most deadly are the malaried parasites of swampy and tropical lands, and also the rarer trypanosomes which cause sleeping sickness. In the bodies of monkeys Prof. Hegner has found all but five of the same twenty-five parasites.

Find Miocene Fungus

THE young men and young women of the University of Southern California who go botanizing under the direction of Dr. G. A. Johnstone have just discovered a specimen of Hydnum, a rare "hangover" specimen of fungus which flourished here during Miocene times, near Oak Wilde in the Arroyo Seco district. The Hydnum's ancient associates, including toadstools, mushrooms, mosses, lichens and liverworts, have held their own more successfully in the same locality. In these primitive plants, modern students are studying botany as it existed long before mankind appeared.

Why Bacteriological Laboratories?

FROM several small cities inquiries have been received regarding the service rendered by municipal bacteriological laboratories. The best way to obtain definite information is to visit one —that, for example, maintained in connection with the Health Department of Pasadena. To this laboratory the board of judges of the United States Chamber of Commerce has awarded second place among cities of the same class, the examination including municipalities of thirty-eight States. Here cultures, or specimens of communicable diseases, are diagnosed; examinations are made in connection with prenatal and infant welfare clinics, food handlers, barbers, and cosmetologists, and also of water, milk, cream and other foods subject to health regulations. The laboratory examines city employees who find themselves in the Emergency Hospital, and co-operates with physicians in all matters pertaining to public health.

Catalina Bird Park

TO SHOW visitors every variety of birds that can be kept alive and contented on Catalina—that is the purpose of this park. Birds which do not breed in captivity, or which do not take their big, open-air captivity happily, are refused admission to the cages. One of the cages is the largest in the world—110 feet in diameter and forty feet high. It houses 168 birds of forty-two different species. All the thousands of birds in this free park, from the funny little finches to the long-legged flamingoes, seem to love to hear themselves sing, or squawk. And the keeper, E. H. Lewis, says he is learning something new in ornithology every day.

What of Russia?

OUT of the great universities at Moscow, Leningrad and Kiev very little information has come recently. To find out what is going on, Prof. George M. Day of Occidental College, and his wife, Ruth Baker Day of the University of Southern California, accompanied by a delegation of research students, are making a tour of the Russian universities. The tour will probably take them on through the seats of oriental learning in India and China, provided revolutionary chaos does not interfere with their plans.

One to Think About

"THE ELECTRON," says Dr. Irving Langmuir, president of the American Chemical Society, "has lost its identity except as a mathematical quantity. The new wave-mechanics theory of atomic structure deals with the contents of the atom as a wave phenomenon in six dimensions."

Zoogenesis—The New Evolution

IN A beautifully written book just issued by Williams & Wilkins, Austin H. Clark of the National Museum tells us that "missing links" in lineages will never be found because they never existed. After an intensive investigation of the oldest fossils and the lowliest forms of life on the bottoms of all the seas, he has arrived at the conclusion that life, as it originally appeared in single-cell form, was capable of developing in many directions—and did so—the outcome being that the ancestors of "all the major groups of animals were formed at the same time . . . That from the primitive single cell there simultaneously appeared through mutation as many different types of animals as were capable of successful existence, while each of these several types through progressive mutation in each successive geological age branched out into every economically possible form. In other words, the study of the possibilities of mutation, combined with the study of progressive specialization, leads us directly to the original simultaneous appearance of the major groups through eogenesis and the subsequent development and refinement of each through evolution."

This conclusion, here somewhat technically stated, is zoology in terms of zoogenesis—a new view of the origin of living things and the development of their parts.

Businesses Based on Science

ACCORDING to the Chamber of Commerce, eleven new business enterprises, based upon recent discoveries in science, were established last month in Los Angeles. Among these is a company, employing seventy-five men, preparing diatomaceous earth for filtration, heat insulation and a concrete admixture; one starting with fifty employees, is making combination water heaters, range boilers and septic tanks; another is producing a new type of recording device for motion picture work; at Playa del Rey the first gasoline absorption plant has been started, and another company will soon be turning out a new line of carbon products. So the work goes on.

What is Cotton?

ACCORDING to Drs. Sponsler and Dore of the University of Southern California, a fiber of cotton is a tube composed of molecules arranged in rings, the rings being strung like beads around the hole. To mercerize the cotton, you break the rings apart and restring them around another hole.

A Musical Cure

FROM a neuropsychiatric veterans' hospital comes word that pipe organ is being used successfully to restore lapsed memories. Samuel Johnson's humorous remark may account for the cure: "Music is noisy, but it softens other noises, and of all noises it is the least disagreeable."

His Strumming for Melody of Evenings Woke the Babies

Dream Waltz

WHEN Leonard was twenty-one, he composed a Dream Waltz. It was published, caught on, and for a considerable while the entire land was dancing to it and humming.

Incidentally, it made quite a pile of money for Leonard, enabling him to plan a trip to Greece, there to satisfy some ballelnations of having sacrificed herself.

Strangely, there was no repudiation in Leonard. What Harper said of him in vituperative mood, was true. He had brought no fulfillment to his marriage. His promise, his inspiration, his melody of spirit, had peltered out. Harper, who thought she had married success, had

An Episode in the Married Life of Helen and Warren

"DEAR, will you need your sweater? I'm taking our raincoats."

"Eh?" Warren at the desk, intent on a road map of Southern Germany.

"Will you need your sweater? I'm taking our raincoats."

"Yes, going to be clear," looking up at the star-spattered sky.

"Got to make an early start," Warren put a protective hand on his elbow "We'd them through the gate bars in a gesture of appeal.

"You must not do that, O Lioness," he said, sullenly. "This is Zavarani. We can take no risks—it will be the garotte for me if he gets free."

"You see," said the spider-lean man, with fierce geniality, "they mean business."

She drew back shuddering. She cried frantically:

"But-tomorrow the caravan will be in, and three days after the slaughter starts!"

"My latest information is that they have postponed it until the fourth," he said, ferociously affable. "After all, they have plenty of time."

"You can't convince me," she cried, with a sob in her voice, "that you, Savaran, will allow yourself to be wiped out by these brutes without striking a blow."

"How can mere man fight fate, the folly of commissaires, and the wiles of women?" he shrugged.

"You saw His Excellency?" she cried, catching at that. "You told him of this peril?"

"I did, with full facts and details. That made him double my guard and order this girdle and chain. He thought it just some trick of mine for engineering an escape and robbing him of his hard-earned blood money."

"And—we can do nothing?" she wailed.

"We can pray that our deaths will be—quick, he said, grimly. "Also, you can send me some real American cigarettes if you, or Dr. Felton, have any; this Kafir tobacco is ruining my palate."

. . . . . .

She sent him cigarettes; she sent him good foods and wines. She even made the mistake of sending him a file in a long loaf—she did not realize what it meant to capture Savaran. The big Arab jailer, pawing through cigarettes and food under the eyes of a white officer, broke the loaf and tossed the file free with a sneering snarl, while the officer laughed contempt in Savaran's face and patted the jailer's broad back. And she heard of that, too, and read in it the fate of Mamee Yorga. Savaran would never be freed—the town was doomed. When she went to him again she was a desperate and contrite woman.

The big, scowling jailer stood at her elbow more watchfully than ever. She turned on him fiercely.

"Stand back," she cried. "I am going away. I shall never see him again. I must speak with him alone!"

The man shrank before the fire in her tone, but he hesitated, and with a splendid gesture she threw wide her arms.

"Could I carry any tools to help him?" she cried, angrily. She wore a sleeveless and, to the big Arab, a shameless pocket handkerchief of a frock. It was difficult to see how she could have concealed even a penknife about her. As the man hung sheepishly Savaran snapped at him:

"Do as you are told, black dog. It is not good for your ears to hear the farewells of white lords."

The whiplash in the lean adventurer's tone completed the jailer's discomfiture. He turned and shuffled off, and as he went Ruth Dacre leaned against the wall, fanning herself with her sun hat, overcome by the heat of the place as much as the strain. It was only as the big jailer turned at the door of the prison to watch her that she nerved herself to go to the bars of the cell door.

"Savaran," she said, hoarsely. "Kiss my hand in farewell. It holds a pocket revolver. I brought it in my hat. Not much . . . but I could not bear to think of you going out without striking a fighting blow.

"Ruth," he said softly, "you are one of the world's great hearts. I am your worshiper."

"Don't," she choked, "I have been a fool, Savaran. But I meant only to be wise. I did it for Mamee Yorga, for all these men and women and children, all my helpless hospital cases—"

"And young Dr. Felton?" he smiled.

"Yes," she said simply, "I love him, Savaran. And I love him, too, for the great work he is doing. I wanted to save him to do greater. It was a mean trick I played on you, but I did not know, I hadn't your wisdom. I felt that if I kept you here, even against your will, you would find a way to fight and beat the Forofangora for the very preservation of your genius."

"That, my dear, is the greatest tribute my genius has had," he said quietly.

"I always did believe in you," she said wearily, "but I did not know what these officials were . . . . . And now it is all over. The Forofangora strike the day after tomorrow and we all die. There is little doubt about it, even the commissaire begins to suspect it."

"And what does that mountain of sleep do?" asked Savaran.

"He can't quite admit it yet . . . the Forofangora are such loyal and meek people, he bleats . . . but he has given out that he will hang all those hostages in a row if the Forofangora do anything to annoy him."

"And then he feel asleep again," Savaran laughed grimly. "And the rest of the government crew?"

"One or two are overhauling the armory stores and crying in despair over them," she told him. "And some took canoe last night and slipped down river."

"Their throats are cut by now," he said cheerfully. "But I'm glad you came today, Ruth, even I begin to find this prison and its fleas irksome."

"But—what do you mean?" she cried. "Have you found a way?"

"I am Savaran—which, of course, is saying yes," he said. He turned to his scowling jailer, rapped: "Is all ready, Abn Zayd?"

The sullen Arab was no longer sullen. He sprang to attention, he was grinning all over his face.

"All is ready," he beamed. "We wait but the word of the Lord Zavarani."

"Pass the word to the guard to muster at once," rapped the loan adventurer. "Send runners to the Gurgur to bid my men parade before government house—in fighting order and now."

The big jailer ran from the place shouting. The sentries at the door became alive and vanished from view. There came the bustle of men gathering outside, the clang of rifle butts on sun-baked earth. The big jailer came running back, as he put his key into the lock of the cell door he cried happily:

"Does the Lord Who Laughs at Lions need his slave's help?"

"Just a match," Savaran grinned, for he could not resist the dramatic. His hands had gone down to his chains. He shook them a little and then tossed the formidable collection aside like discarded undergarments."

Ruth Dacre leaned against a wall gasping.

"You have released yourself—could have at any time?" she cried bewildered. "But this man, your jailer—?"

"Allow me to introduce Abn Zayd," grinned Savaran, "My headman in many expeditions."

"And—and you got him in here as your own jailer!" she gasped. "How—how?"

"He is Zavarani," beamed the big man. "Wonders are natural to him."

"Less than a wonder here," said Savaran largely, for he was enjoying this. "The officials are so sleepy that when the real jailer went down with fever and recommended his cousin, Abn Zayd, they did not push their inquiries very deep. But let us go out and review my army."

"Even the soldiers are yours?" she laughed hysterically.

"I had five hundred men on my pay roll," he grinned. "It was a pity to let them waste their time in idleness, especially as the government forces were eager for recruits owing to slackness in enlistments. Quite a number joined up and spread the news of Savaran through the ranks of the all too ready regulars, for an army will always back a real leader to a man."

They went out and five grinning ranks of hard-bitten askari came to the salute like veterans at the barked command of Abn Zayd. The two officers of the guard were sitting blinking at rifle muzzles in the little mess room of the prison barracks.

Savaran stalked like an outsize Napoleon along the ranks. Spoke a handful of harsh words in Yorgi which sent two hundred well-oiled rifles tossing in the air as the men cheered, and called for horses. Two horses. Ruth Dacre rode with him as he marched in triumph through the sleek and sleepy streets of Mamee Yorga to government house. But there was no sleep in Mamee Yorga once Savaran had passed. Savaran left no details unthought of. He had even provided a band.

So behind the block-quickening scream of native instruments they swung into the huge parade ground facing the official palace. It was already full of black fighting men. Regulars of the colonial force marshaled in companies with new machine guns ominously trained on the commissaire's dwelling, and masses of Savaran's even more formidable irregulars drawn up behind. A huddle of white officers stood about the palace steps uneasily fingering their pistols as Savaran strode largely up to them.

"Gentlemen," he said grimly. "Draw your weapons and it is a massacre. On the other hand wait patiently a little while and I will find you plenty of use for them."

His excellency the commissaire was as yet only half awake to what had happened. He heaved his gross body from his chair and, blinking across his great desk, mumbled:

"What is this? Most irregular—a prisoner without an armed guard. Most improper."

"Fat one," said Savaran, with ferocious geniality. "Go back to your dozing. You are temporarily deposed. Since you can neither govern nor protect Mamee Yorga, an expert has been called in." He turned to two frightened secretaries: "Take away this—bundle," he said. "Savaran needs his chair of state."

. . . . . .

The Forofangora attacked to time table. They came out of the jungle mists into the red run of dawn. They moved in an exultant swarm, tight packed because, thanks to the two great rivers, only one side of the town could be approached. But that did not bother them. Dawn sun showed them a broken old wall, behind which drowsed a sleep-sodden town. No man stirred in it; there was a curious silence even under the drumming of spears. Even when their chiefs leaped forward and loosed their bull roars of slaughter there was no movement.

No movement, no sound at all from Mamee Yorga until the mass of naked braves were no more than forty feet from the wall, and even then no sound from the wall—only a new sound from the Forofangora warriors. A strange sound. A shrill outcry, a screaming. The foremost ranks were suddenly yelling and leaping and trying to twist back in a panic of pain. They hurled themselves back into the mob that hurled itself forward with a force that piled up the whole mass in a wild maggot squirm of tangled confusion. And they screamed that the ground beneath their feet was aswarm with devils.

This was not quite correct. Savaran had merely ordered that through every door and every flat plank in Mamee Yorga there should be drivel eight-inch nails sharpened to needle point. These

Savaran, That Reckless Africa's Worst Quarter, the Beautiful Amer Started Him Thrilling

THE Gurgur quarter of Mamee Yorga is a multi-race slum built on a sand spit where two jungle rivers join and, being in a Latin colony, it nuzzles in all its vices against a "white town" that looks exactly as soft guitars playing on milk white moonlight sound.

A pretty place, Mamee Yorga proper, with its dreamy palms and patios, if morally a cross between a graveyard and a garden of sleep; that is because, as an outpost town, it is right at the bottom of civilization's bag. It is, in fact, so hopelessly cut off by the lowering African bush that the stern-wheel river boats can only bring it news of the outer world every three months. Between boats there is nothing for the government bulamatari to do but eat and sleep, flirt languidly with a colleague's wife, and dream endlessly of the day when he will retire to Europe with a fat pension and fatter pickings.

The pickings are certainly fat, since the only reason for Mamee Yorga's existence is riches. To it, by its two great rivers and its five caravan routes, comes the vast and easy wealth of the African interior, and quite a lot of that wealth can be made to stick to the fingers of the intelligent. The local official knows this well, so does the African underworld—hence the Gurgur.

A place to make hell blush, the Gurgur, at the same time it was a haven of refuge for gentlemen such as Savaran, with prices on their heads. The police of Mamee Yorga could be stern enough, in their own quarter, especially where there was blood money to be gained; but being Latin they were also both indolent and wise. It was better to shut their eyes to the Gurgur than to stir up trouble that might be disastrous to white rule so far from help. Thus official Mamee Yorga ignored the Gurgur.

Savaran had no liking for the Gurgur, but it was convenient. He could look after himself, he could defy the police, he had money to spend, and it was the one place where he could organize an expedition that should set all Africa ringing with his name again before many months were out. Meanwhile he halted at the end of the blind gut in which his house stood and looked with calm eyes at a mob of multi-colored cutthroats milling about a victim.

Some one, he saw, was being robbed, probably murdered, but local habits intrigued him so little that he was about to return to Poison Charley's and drink coffee until the fracas was over when a voice called:

"Savaran! Mr. Savaran! Help!"

The call was English. The voice was a woman's.

It was quite remarkable—and so was Savaran. In ninety seconds the snarling street was as peaceful as a tomb and rather like one. Two black figures lay very still in the filth, while another crawled away on hands and knees. The rest had scattered like disturbed flies at the mere knowledge that Zavarani was among them. A slim-legged Arab boy leaned against a wall holding back his panting sobs with the haik that half covered his face, and Savaran, slipping his dagger back into its jeweled sheath, twitched the haik aside. Then he laughed his harsh laugh, caught up this boy who was no boy in his long, spidery arms and stalked toward his house. There was the form of another Arab boy lying across the door, but Savaran took it and the doorstep in his long stride.

"My chouach!" cried a voice from his arms. "Is he hurt?"

Savaran put his burden down into the house yard and returned to the still form.

"Not he," he said, with ferocious geniality. "He's got his pay for bringing a sight-seeing efferengi into the Gurgur—he's dead."

. . . . . .

The Arab boy who was no boy sitting on the gold and silk divan of Savaran's inner room trying to tuck her slim, sound, very shapely, and very bare legs away from the sardonic glance of Savaran. Savaran had eyes for her face, too. She made a good boy, short featured and gallant looking; her boldness was softened by her undoubted femininity to an alluring charm. She was young and full of fire.

"Well, was it worth it?" Savaran asked, with his eagle smile. He hadn't a doubt she was a sensation-hunting globe trotter.

"I came to see you—Savaran," she said.

"That," he grinned fiercely, "naturally makes all the difference. Yet had you only sent your photograph I should have flown straight to your hotel."

She flushed richly.

"There are two warrants waiting for you if you step outside the Gurgur," she said, quietly.

"What are two among so many?" he laughed.

"Yes," she breathed, "I know of your exploits. That is why I came. I am told you are the finest soldier in Africa; that you spend your life raising armies and fighting tribes."

"And making kings and—queens!" he said, with a flash of white teeth. "Even rumor tells the truth at times. And, like Cleopatra, you are drawn—"

"Why," she asked coolly, "do you treat me like a flattery-hunting flapper?"

"It is a waste of precious opportunity," he smiled, and sat beside her.

And at that she rose quietly, stripped the haik from her slim figure, and, shaking down the white undergarment, modern and skimpy as it was, stood revealed in a nurse's uniform.

"You tricked Savaran!" he cried. "I, Savaran, expert in women, thought you only a debutante greedy for thrills. You're the new American nurse at the Magdalena hospital, Ruth Dacre."

"You know me?" she cried, surprised.

"I am Savaran, I always know," he said, magnificently. "And even the Gurgur speaks in wonder of the white men whose hands seem only alive to heal and be kind, no matter what color the skin."

"They do suffer so much and so patiently, these Africans," she said, softly. "And the hospital is crowded out with them."

"You must be terribly overworked then, now that young Dr. Felton is down with fever," he said. She flushed again as girls in love do, even if she said with a brave little lift to her chin:

"He has worn himself out with work, nearly killed himself. One can scarcely do less with such an example."

"And you'll have to go on doing it for months," he said, his eyes gleaming.

"Yes, Dr. Felton will be helpless for months," she admitted, and she looked at him strangely. "Three months at least. And he won't leave Mamee Yorga even if we tried to force him."

"And you want him to leave?" he asked.

"You know he ought to leave," she said, looking at him steadily. "You are Savaran—you know about the Forofangora."

He frowned savagely over harsh eyes, then shrugged in his large way.

"Naturally, I know—I am Savaran. But you—how do you know, a greenhorn only just come to Africa? It is but a bush whisper."

"You forget we have men from the bush in our wards," she said. "As I dressed the hurts of one of them he whispered that I must run away from Mamee Yorga because the Forofangora were coming to slay."

"And you believed him?" His eyes were keen.

"I had to believe him—he swore on the stone."

"Did he give details?"

"It is to be in three weeks' time," she said, "when the Gelem caravan comes in. That caravan carries record loads of gold dust and ivory."

"And diamonds from a new field," said Savaran, never able to resist a gesture.

"He did not tell me about the diamonds," said Ruth Dacre. "But he is certain that the Forofangora will stop at nothing to take such rich loot; they will sweep Mamee Yorga with death. And it will happen three days after the caravan comes in, two months before the steamer arrives to take the gold and ivory to the coast—months before any sort of help can get to us." She looked at him steadily. "You know all this is true?"

"I know," he grunted, fiercely. "Mamee Yorga will be a burnt-out shambles before a month has gone. The Forofangora have been saving this up for years." He sat back and regarded her with a fierce and mocking smile. "And what does His Excellency, 'the Big Vegetable,' say to it all?"

"The Big Vegetable" is a highly disrespectful term for any official big-wig in that colony's officialdom. In this case it referred to the important if lethargic adjunct commissaire, who ruled over Mamee Yorga and all these frontier marches.

"You know I've been to him?" she cried.

"I guessed, my dear," he said, with a grin of satisfaction at his own shrewdness. "You went straight to his excellency with your terrible news, as a good citizen should—and what did he say? But, no—Savaran will tell you: The fat little gentleman chucked you under your pretty chin with his fat, pink hand, giggled sleepily, and said: 'There! There, my pretty flower, do not trouble your small, charming head. We know all about these rumors. We have been listening to them since before you were a baby, and they signify—nothing! Nothing at all, little cabbage—and, even, they signify less in the matter of the Forofangora. We know them, those niggers. Twenty-five years ago we whipped them most severely for being naughty, and since then they have been so meek, so meek! Women-men, but most loyal subjects; glad even of our rule; never as much as grudging the collector a centimo of the hut tax.'"

Savaran's voice, as he spoke took on the fat, drowsy, fatherly unction of his excellency, so marvelously that Ruth Dacre cried:

"You might almost have heard him!"

"Oh, Savaran knows the soul of that wart-hog in all its laziness, incompetence and folly."

"But all of the officials are like him," cried Ruth Dacre. "None of them will listen to me."

"What did you expect," he said, scornfully, "when they do not even listen to Savaran?"

"You have warned them?" she gasped.

"Savaran is also a white man," he grinned, fiercely. "Yes, I even sent them a messenger—they thought it comic, I hear, or possibly some trick by which Savaran hoped to feather his own nest—and then they all went to sleep again."

"And yet the Forofangora will come!" she cried.

"They will come," he said grimly. "Their babies of twenty-five years ago have been reared with but one thought—to take revenge for that defeat of twenty-five years ago. There are seventy thousand fighting spears waiting but the word to slay. They will roll over Mamee Yorga and half the colony before any defense can concentrate. Be wise, obey your bushman, my dear—and run for it."

"It's incredible," she gasped, wide-eyed, "that men should lounge indifferent like this on the very lip of a volcano that bubbles up to overwhelm them."

"History, I see, is not your strong point," he said, dryly. "You don't recognize it when it repeats itself. Why, your own forefathers petted the Powhatan redskins before they rose and slaughtered them in the James River massacres. Men are like that, my dear."

"And nothing can be done?"

"You can run," he grinned. "A canoe party down river will keep you ahead of the slaughter. Or, better still, I can offer—"

"I mean here!" she burst out. "Couldn't Mamee Yorga be defended?"

"With ease," he shrugged. "The old pioneers were real soldiers. They chose an admirable position, as you can see, with the broad rivers guarding three sides. Even the old land wall could stop mere spear fighters like the Forofangora if properly defended. And the town could hold out. There is unlimited water, food in plenty, and the local inhabitant is good fighting stuff—I know, I am em-

ing that topmost branches with the landing gear. If he had miscalculated a moment during which the take-off Dick would have been impaled on those same branches. A cool head had won him safely.

Climbing steadily, the plane circled the clearing and again headed southward. What Dick looked down and backward, it seemed as though the clearing were full of men.

Now Dick flew at 3000 feet, less than half his former altitude, for ploying him myself. A good leader could sit safe and tight here for half a year—certainly long enough for help to be rushed up to him."

"And you are the finest fighting leader in Africa," she said, quietly. "You alone can save Mamee Yorga."

"I have," he said, with sardonic politeness, "another appointment."

"Another black tribe to be crushed?"

"Not precisely," he answered. "Diamonds to be collected."

"Diamonds—from this neighborhood?" she frowned.

"You forget," he smiled. "A new field has just been found. The Mbamsef, in the hills to the northwest, made the find. They are a race of dogs that I ought to have punished long ago for a treachery; but they were not worth the effort. But having diamonds—that is a different story."

"You could have your diamond stealing until after you had saved Mamee Yorga," she said, contemptuously.

"Few women," he grinned, "understand the finer points of strategy. I, Napoleon and, in fact, all the really great conquerors get our results through swift action. The Forofangora know about these diamonds, too. The mere act of their striking at Mamee Yorga, even if they only besiege it for months, will gain them the support of other tribes, the Sammo and the Laro-Laro, for instance, and they will use some of those tribes to attack the Mbamsef; they will want those diamonds to buy arms. Naturally, I must get to the Mbamsef, beat them, and turn them into a practical fighting force to meet the Forofangora before they come for those diamonds. I have no time to waste if I am to triumph."

"And you will leave Mamee Yorga at the mercy of these brutes for the sake of a handful of diamonds!" she cried, scornfully.

"Say two hands full," he mocked. "It is quite a respectable field. Also, who knows but it will be the beginning of my kingdom? What cannot Savaran do with money and fighting men among those hills?" He caught her hands. "Come, my pretty, join me. You will be safe then and a throne waits at the end of our adventure. You have Savaran's spirit, too—you can dare."

She tore her hands away.

"Can even a throne weigh against the slaughter of hundreds of white men and women, tens of thousands of peaceful natives?" she cried. "I thought Savaran was of finer mettle."

His eyes became hard and dangerous, as they did when his vanity was touched.

"He is!" he cried, fiercely. "Did he not warn that sloth of a commissaire of the danger at the risk of his own liberty and ambition? What more could he do?"

"He can stay and defend Mamee Yorga!" she cried, passionately. "You are already collecting your forces for the attack on the Mbamsef; you have arms. With these as the backbone of the defense, and with your genius, you could hold the Forofangora until help came."

"Certainly you have charm," he smiled, grimly. "You make your patients whisper too many secrets. And did you tell all this to 'the Big Vegetable'?"

"Am I a police spy?" she cried, fiercely. "I knew what he would do to you if he heard you were here." Suddenly she put both her hands on his shoulders. "Savaran, save Mamee Yorga as only, you can!"

That Francois Villon recklessness that could make him toss a crown over his shoulder for the sake of a woman's smile swung him. His arms went about her. She had won him—had she not stiffened at his touch. He laughed sardonically.

"Save Mamee Yorga—but particularly young Dr. Felton, eh?" he cried. "You are no more disinterested than Savaran. Also it is impossible. You yourself have told why. You dare not tell the authorities I am here; they would clap me in jail, even if I appeared to defend their wretched little town. That is how they regard Savaran."

"So, you could force them to listen!" she cried.

"I have not your optimism," he said "That slug of a commissaire is too rooted in inertia. He does not want to stir; he does not want even to think the Forofangora dangerous. On the other hand, he does know that Savaran is worth twenty thousand dollars in government rewards. So I would go to jail; I would be kept rotting in jail until the steamer came—or, rather, until I died, incapable of resistance, from Forofangora spears. I think my own plans and my diamonds provide a sweeter outlook."

"But—you are Savaran. You could find a way?" she pleaded.

"You are very beautiful," he smiled, pinching her cheek. "Almost you make Savaran forget his common sense. But not quite. I know these overfed pigs—they are hopeless. I know also that unless I leave Mamee Yorga before the Forofangora can block the trail I, too, shall be in a plight as hopeless. So, then, within three weeks I leave. It is the only thing to do. And you—if you are wise you will come, too. There is only death here for you; but with me there is the love of Savaran and a throne and your name, with his, in history. Yes, you had better come."

"Never!" she cried, fiercely. "I won't desert."

"Well," he grinned, fiercely, "you have three weeks to dwell upon the thought of what death at savage hands will be like, and, remember, just one little message to me any time during those weeks and you will be safe."

He knew human nature too well, this strange adventurer. Heroism in the abstract is so easy, but three weeks' reflection on death might beget quite another mood. He saw the beginnings of it, in fact, in the ready, even the clinging willingness with which she accepted his escort through the evil stews of the Gurgur.

He was right. Ruth Dacre fought long against her fear; her courage, in fact, held out until two days before he was to march—but then it broke, and a hospital orderly crept through the streets of the Gurgur to Savaran's house with a note.

He read that note with his harsh, mocking smile. His arrangements were practically completed. His force of nearly five hundred hand-picked askari and carriers were scattered through the Gurgur and the nearby villages ready to concentrate at a single word. He had his rifles, machine guns and ammunition stored in various godowns under his hands.

Her note told him plainly that, womanlike, she needed a final persuasion. She must talk to him again, she said, before he left. She would meet him that night by the tomb of the Lonely Saint in the bare piece of ground between Mamee Yorga and the Gurgur.

Well, it was all very much as he had expected, though he had felt that her gallant little face spoke of sterner stuff.

She was waiting for him in the shadow of the tomb, and he went straight to her, caught her, and kissed her. A dashing attack, both in war and women, was his favorite method.

"No!" she cried, tremulously, thrusting him off. "We must talk . . . You are ready to leave—all your forces, everything is ready?"

"You can ride out on a silk saddled mule at any hour you like," he said, smiling down on her fiercely.

"And—and you still think the Forofangora mean to blot out Mamee Yorga?" she panted.

"Are you beginning to doubt that?" he mocked.

"No," she said, huskily. "Another man has told me it is true. But—but the commissaire laughs at it more than ever. The Forofangora have sent five chieftains' sons to him, begging him to keep them in his palace and train them in European ways. He says the Forofangora would not dare attack when he holds such hostages."

"That is exactly what the Forofangora want him to think," said Savaran, grimly. "They are wily people, the Forofangora; they know that some rumors of their intentions must get about, so they send these hostages to lull our fat commissaire's fears. Those young men gave themselves willingly for that purpose. They are ready to die to help their tribe to victory."

"You're sure?"

"Even now the Forofangora are sharpening their spear blades. Even now their best marksmen are practicing with the twelve hundred Belgian rifles that have been smuggled to them. Even now their women are stirring the braves to frenzy with the singing of the war vaunts."

"Then Mamee Yorga is doomed?" she said, in a strangled voice.

"Nothing can save it."

"Except—you!" she said, fiercely.

"Not even excepting me," he said. "I have made my plans. I march in two days."

"Savaran!" she cried, hoarsely. "I beseech you! Think of all these innocent people! Find a way to save them!"

"It is too late," he said. "I am Savaran. I have made my plans—I do not alter them."

"Savaran—for my sake!" she cried.

"That is not a matter for you to worry about, for I am taking you with me," he smiled.

He stepped close and caught her up in his arms. He chuckled as she did not resist. She sighed, relaxed against him, and, as he held her high, her arms went about him, holding him tight. It was triumph. He turned to stride back to the Gurgur with his spoils, and as he turned he saw the glint of rifles pointed at his chest, and the moonlight revealed three ragged local policemen—but they kill just as finally as the natty sort. Then a couple of dapper white officers stepped from the shadows, and they bristled with firearms, too. One blew a whistle, and from almost every angle of the compass armed men began closing in. Scores of them. Mamee Yorga knew Savaran and was not taking risks.

The spider-spare adventurer backed a step and tried to drop the girl to get at his pistol. She only clung tighter, holding his arms and crying anxiously:

"Don't fight them, Savaran. They're ready to shoot at any excuse. They mean to take you, dead or alive."

Savaran stood stock still and laughed savagely.

"Delilah can boast at least one worthy daughter," he cried.

. . . . . .

She came to him four days later. Two days after he should have left Mamee Yorga and a day after he could leave it, for already, he knew, the Forofangora were blocking the trails out.

The big Arab jailer would not let her pass through the barred gate into the cell.

"It is not permitted, O Lioness," he said, gruffly. "See, this is the mighty Zavarani. Give him but a loophole and he vanishes away."

They were taking no risks with Savaran. A double guard of newer, more businesslike askari filled the prison buildings and two armed sentinels stood each side of the door. As she grew accustomed to the gloom she saw the leg and wrist irons that linked up to his steel girdle, saw the strong chain that stretched from that to a staple in the wall. He sat up on his stone bench with a clink of metal as he saw her, throwing his cigarette away.

"Little Delilah comes to gloat over the fallen Samson," he said, fiercely.

"Savaran—don't!" she cried, huskily. "You know it was the only way."

"To keep a lover near you?" he mocked.

"To save Mamee Yorga," she faltered.

He deliberately jingled his irons.

"Listen to the armor of the fighting man," he said, grimly. "Could anyone but a woman have decided that the best way to save a town was by betraying into prison the one man who could do it?"

"You are Savaran. You will find a way," she cried, desperately.

"Count my guards," he said. "It is because I am Savaran that they mean to give me no chances."

Even as he spoke the big Arab warder touched her arms, for she had stretched

"Yes," she breathed, "I know of your exploits. That is why I came. I am told you are the finest soldier in Africa; that you spend your life raising armies and fighting tribes."

THE SUNNY COUNTRY TWINS

By Margaret Kostewal

When the twins' grandmother made her annual visit to the twins' home, she brought gifts for all of them. To Jean she gave a beautiful pair of earrings. They were quite small and shaped like forget-me-nots. The tiny petals were of blue enamel and the center o' each blossom was a perfect diamond.

"I want you to go to the market for me, Jean," mother said. "Joe will have to go with you because I need so many things."

But Joe could not be found.

"Perhaps I'll find him on the way," said Jean. Grandmother had fastened the earrings in place, and as Jean set out, she proudly pushed her hair back so that everyone might see them.

She did not find Joe, so she bought the groceries and started for home fairly staggering under the load. It was then that she met a lady who stopped her and said, "What lovely, lovely earrings." Then she came very close to Jean, looking sharply up and down the street and suddenly reached over and with rapid fingers slipped the earrings from the startled girl's ears.

"Hush," she warned, "or I'll call the policeman."

Jean was already speechless with fright, but this threat almost paralyzed her, for she was very, very much afraid of policemen, and she noticed one across the street.

Just at this moment, Joe, who had been sent by his mother to meet Jean, came up to them, and the woman walked hurriedly away. Jean sobbingly related her story, and Joe paused only long enough to give Jean one disgusted look before he dashed over to the policeman and the two of them gave chase to the woman.

In a very few minutes Joe was back with the earrings.

"I honestly don't believe you know what policemen are for. I honestly don't," he said. He snatched the groceries from Jean's arms and stalked disdainfully home ahead of her.

It was Joe who told the story of their adventure to mother and father and grandmother, and when he had finished, father said gently to Jean, "I believe you have the wrong idea about policemen. They are soldiers ready to fight for the rights and principles of all good and law-abiding people, and to defend those people against all harm and injustice."

Jean's eyes were very wide. "Why it's almost as though I were a queen," she exulted, "and had an army at my command."

"Yes," grandmother smiled, "you are a queen, and your kingdom is law and order, and your soldiers are the policemen."

FRASCATI AND TUSCULUM

One of the most delightful excursions from Rome is south to Frascati and Tusculum. This section is higher than Rome, and cooler, so it has become a favorite summer resort for Romans and foreigners alike. There are many beautiful villas owned by famous Roman families, and often the public is admitted to the gardens of ancient trees and splashing fountains, and to the interior courtyards and galleries. It is a hard climb to see them all, so many people prefer to hire little donkeys before leaving Frascati. The road to Tusculum was built by the ancient Romans—Cicero's chariot used often to pass over it on the way to his summer place, and all the patricians came this way to the theater, which is in a fine state of preservation to this day.

THE MUTINY AT THE MINE

By Lieut. James E. Eldredge

Dick Forves was "clean out of gas." The good Texans at Laredo simply didn't want to fly in his spick and span airplane, the merchants weren't interested in aerial advertising, and nobody seemed to have any wood to saw!

It was a tough situation for the young flyer. His aerial junket around the rim of the nation had started out auspiciously from San Francisco; the first three weeks, in Southern California and Arizona, had seen plenty of joy-riders and plenty of income. But Laredo, on the border, was different. There hadn't been a flicker of interest in him and his plane for three days, and meals promised to become irregular mighty soon.

"But I won't wire home for money, even if I starved!" Dick told himself grimly. A tall, lean figure in his leather coat, he was wandering uncertainly through the upper part of town, his tanned face solemn. "There's a job to be had, and I'll find it!"

It was the tempting odor of cooking meat that gave him the cue. He stopped in front of the small restaurant, debating the advisability of breaking into his shrinking capital for a meal. At the corner of the restaurant window he saw a sign:

DISHWASHER WANTED

"It's not exciting," reflected the youth, "but it will keep me going for a while."

Ten minutes later he was busily and satisfactorily filling the void within while, between bites, he regaled a one-eyed Mexican cook with a recital of flying adventures. And within twenty minutes he had lost count of the number of dishes washed. From the mountainous piles that the waiter brought in, he decided ruefully, his coming must have been a signal for the cafe to double its business!

Seven o'clock finally came and, with hands cracked by the dish water but with two big silver dollars in his pocket, Dick trudged wearily out to his plane to sleep in his accustomed bedroom, a hammock slung under the wing.

That night the aviator dreamed that he was pursued through the air by a vengeful army of dishes. How well he escaped he realized when he awoke to find the sun directly over head. It was noon and his oversleeping had cost him his job.

"Well," he told himself glumly, "if there's one job, there's another!"

Within a few minutes he was on the way to town. But he was no more than started when he felt a tug on his coat. Turning, he saw a tattered Mexican lad about 10 years old looking up at him. Dick grinned, "Sorry, but I'm broke, too . . ."

The boy shook his head. "Mr. Harrison, he say give you this." He held out a large envelope.

Dick's surprise was increased by the contents of the letter:

"American Mining Syndicate.—24 Main street, Laredo, Tex. May 5, 1920.

"Mr. Richard Forbes, Laredo, Tex. Dear sir:

"Will you kindly call at this office at your earliest convenience? We have a matter to discuss with you that may be to your advantage.

"George Harrison, president."

A half-hour later, his hunger forgotten, Dick entered the offices of the American Mining Syndicate. To his surprise he was conducted at once to an inner office and found himself looking across the desk at a quiet, keen-eyed man of 50—a man whose forehead showed a wrinkle of worry.

The man wasted no words. With a little smile he handed Dick three telegrams.

"Read them," he said tersely.

In growing wonder, Dick read a complete description of himself, together with statements that his integrity and character were vouched for by the Chief of Police of San Francisco and the Bank of Italy.

"You see we know all about you," said Harrison with a smile. Then, without further delay, he plunged into business.

"We are up against it, Forbes," he said. "The Jesus Maria mine, a large property of ours near Villadalma, Mex., 150 miles south of here, is cut off by outlaws. We have to get a big pay roll through at once or the 300 peons that are employed there are liable to turn against the mine and wreck it, if they don't get their money. They may even do worse. You can't reason with those fellows, you know.

"Here's what I want you to do: Carry $22,000 in gold in your plane across to Edwards, the manager of the mine, before 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. It's our last chance. You will very likely save the lives of the twelve Americans at the mine, save the company thousands of dollars, and prevent a dangerous uprising.

"I already have permission from the Mexican government for a flight of this kind. We will pay you $300 for your time and insure the airplane for the trip. What we want you to do is to get that pay roll there in a hurry.

"Will you take it?"

Dick needed no time to think. A job—adventure!

"You bet I will!" he said, his heart thumping with excitement.

The details were quickly arranged. Harrison himself was to meet Dick at 4 o'clock the next morning with the money.

The first rays of the sun had not yet tinted the winding Rio Grande when Dick pulled his plane into the still morning air and began climbing steadily.

More than a mile above the earth the machine hummed across the border. In the first glow of dawn Dick made out the silvery tracks of the Mexican National Railway and, using them as a guide, penetrated into Mexico.

Checking his direction by landmarks Harrison had sketched out on a rude map for him, the pilot held the airplane on the southward course for an hour. The country over which the airplane passed was sparsely settled; tiny farms of peons with here and there the hacienda of some landowner made the only breaks in the mesquite carpet that covered the level country.

Presently the plane approached a range of low hills. Dick gazed down at these with interest, for it was in this range, Harrison had said, that the outlaws were numerous. A single group of buildings at the base of one of the larger hills attracted his attention and he wondered if the isolated rancho could, by any chance, be the stronghold of Don Miguel Alvarez, a noted leader of the border outlaws. The complete absence of life made it all sinister, menacing.

Dick's gaze was jerked from the secluded group of buildings below by a series of intermittent explosions in his motor. He opened the throttle wide, but the motor did not respond. Swiftly, methodically, he jammed gas and spark in an effort to locate the trouble, but with no success. Realizing that he would have to land, Dick pointed the nose of the plane toward the one open spot he could see in the brush-covered hills for miles.

Circling above the tiny meadow as he descended, the pilot saw that the level spot in the center was barely 100 yards across and that to land in so small an area he would have to stall the plane over the mesquite trees at the edge, letting it settle almost vertically to level ground. He didn't like the landing, but, with barely half of the power of the motor remaining, he had no other choice.

Skimming just over the tree tops, Dick turned off the ignition when 100 feet from the edge of the clearing. The momentum of the plane carried it almost to the opening before it began to settle. Dick pulled back on the control stick, raising the nose to keep the plane in the air as long as possible. Just as the last of the tree tops were passed the airplane settled, striking the round hard but safely and in perfect position. When, after rolling a bare seventy yards, it stopped, the pilot breathed a sigh of relief. The field on which he had landed was so small that only once in ten times could he have maneuvered a plane into the clearing without striking some of the trees that bordered it.

A swift survey convinced Dick that though he was in an extremely dangerous part of the country for a wandering aviator, the inaccessibility of his position made for his temporary safety. It would take mounted men some time to thread their way through the heavy underbrush to the emergency landing field. Although the descent of the airplane must have been witnessed and reported by some keen-eyed scout of the outlaws, Dick felt that he could repair the motor and leave before the arrival of anyone.

He soon located the trouble. A bit of rubber, not larger than the tip of a match, had been loosened from one of the hose connections of the gasoline feed line and become lodged in the carburetor jet that fed fuel to the left bank of cylinders. It was the work of a moment to clean and reassemble the carburetor; then, before cranking the motor, Dick gave a final glance over the field. As he did so his brows wrinkled in perplexity. He left the machine and, going over to the edge of the field, carefully paced its length.

"One hundred and fifteen paces," he reflected in some alarm. "I can't get the machine off smooth ground with less than a 100-yard run. This long grass will hold it back, too. If I tried to take her off, loaded as she is, I'd be pretty sure to crash against those trees at the end."

He thought of the fifty-pound bundle, carefully wrapped in canvas in the front seat, and of the trust placed in him by Harrison. Better to wreck trying to reach the mine than to fall into the hands of the outlaws without making every attempt! He ran back to the plane and quickly stripped it of all excess weight. The previous tool kit he discarded first, then the seat cushions, suit case and bedding, spare parts for the motor. That lightened the load 200 pounds, but 200 pounds wasn't enough.

Taking a small wrench, Dick stepped under the nose of the plane and turned a valve. A stream of gasoline gushed out. The pilot watched the gauge until just enough fuel remained to get him to the mine—about forty-five minutes, he estimated—and then closed the valve. Oil and water he treated in the same way. With a sigh of regret Dick abandoned his heavy leather flying coat, a treasured gift from his father, and, stepping around to the propeller, cranked the ninety horsepower motor. He hurried now—danger might be very close.

After running the motor at full speed, Dick removed the two stones that were blocking the wheels and taxied over to the edge of the clearing.

"Here goes nothing," he said to himself as he gazed at the thick growth of mesquite trees just beyond the little strip of yellow grass. "I'll soon know whether old Betsy will get out of here."

He was not a second too soon for, suddenly four heavily armed, sombreroed horsemen burst from the underbrush at the edge of the meadow. Spurring furiously, they galloped toward the airplane with angry yells. Above the steady chugging of the idling motor came the spiteful crack! crack! of rifles.

Dick opened the throttle wide. Slowly at first but gathering momentum with every foot, the airplane charged straight at the outlaws. The sight of the moving monster bearing down on them caused three of the four Mexicans to dash wildly for cover, but the horse of the fourth, terrified beyond all control, balked and stood trembling directly in the path of the plane that was rushing at him at forty miles an hour.

Coolly Dick watched the luckless horse and rider sweep up to him; but he did not move. Closer and closer they came. Just then a crash seemed inevitable, he pulled the control stick easily toward him and the plane suddenly became buoyant. Over the bewildered rider, missing his head by inches, the plane passed. For a second it flew level, gaining more speed, then—with a final roar—Dick zoomed it straight up and over the trees, flicking the tail wheel with the landing gear. If he had miscalculated a moment during the take-off Dick would have been impaled on those same branches. A cool head had won him safety.

Climbing steadily, the plane circled the clearing and again headed southward. When Dick looked down and backward, it seemed as though the clearing were full of men.

Now Dick flew at 2000 feet, less than half his former altitude, for Villadalma was near. Circling an ominous-looking rain cloud, he caught his first glimpse of the town. It was easily identified by the long ore loading platform by the railroad spur.

Dick throttled the motor and descended until he was a bare 200 feet above the town. A short distance south of the ore loading platform he located the well-worn trail made by the burro trains used to convey ore. This was to be his guide for the remainder of the journey. The trail led to a wide arroyo due east of the dozen ramshackle buildings of Villadalma.

For twenty of the forty miles from the railroad to the mine the airplane skimmed along a short distance above the hills. Then, much to Dick's disgust, the slight mist through which he had been flying changed to a heavy, low-hanging cloud. It became almost impossible to see the ground. To add to his discomfort Dick's face began to feel as though it were undergoing a bombardment of needle points—raindrops beaten back with the speed of bullets by the propeller. Dick kept doggedly on. At times he had to fly as low as fifty feet in order to see his course, a dangerous procedure considering the irregularity of the hills. It is a very easy matter to run into a knoll when one is speeding low through semidarkness at ninety miles an hour.

With almost all gasoline gone, Dick began to peer more and more anxiously through the mist below him. He knew that the mine must be close, for he recognized several of the landmarks described by Harrison. His one fear was for his fuel supply.

When the clock on the dashboard showed that only sufficient gasoline remained to run the plane for one more minute, and he could still see no sign of the mine, Dick pointed the nose of the plane up to climb through the rain cloud and gain all the altitude possible. This would increase the gliding radius of the plane, so that, when the motor stopped, Dick would have a better opportunity to pick a level spot on which to land. Unfortunately he had succeeded in climbing only far enough into the fleecy, stinging mass to lose all sight of the ground, when, with a farewell cough, the motor died. After a few indifferent revolutions, the propeller stopped.

Snoopy in Do-Do Land

by Aunt Dolly

PICTURED BY HARDIE GRAMATKY

IN STRANGE LANDS

Snoop wagged his long ears, as Becky said they must be careful. One tiny slip, at such a time, would mean the end of them. Therefore, the dog and the rabbit lay motionless in the field of clover, trying to figure a way out of their difficulty. But this did not seem an easy task as the Village of Regret was alive with tiny people, pouring into the streets, armed with the strangest weapons; large clubs, bows and arrows, and, even bright-colored guns, with torpedoes in their barrels.

Snoop, listening to their fast-approaching footsteps, crept closer to Becky. "We must escape," he said, "I can't stand living in such a place. Whoever heard of regrets being alive, anyway—it all seems too strange."

"But it's true," sighed the dog, moving inch by inch, toward a clump of trees, "the part that puzzles me is, how can we outwit them?"

"I have an idea," cried Snoop, delightedly, as the wind came rushing toward them. "I can fly, but you, poor Becky—your ears are so small, you could never get in the air."

"Let's try," begged the dog, "perhaps you could balance me, if I straighten myself out, and paddle with my feet. They might take the place of wings."

Snoopy, stretching his huge ears, did not answer, but his body was trembling with excitement, as the dawn wind steadily increased. It swept over the hills and grew in force as it circled low to the earth. Presently, it was tearing and tugging at the rabbit's ears.

"Now," he breathed, "now is the time to try. Lengthen out your body, Becky, and hold on to my tail. Only be careful, in case we fall, to brace yourself in such a way you will land on your feet."

The Airedale was speechless with astonishment at the thought of such an escapade, but, as there seemed small choice, she flattened herself in the clover, and took a firm grip on the rabbit's tail. He wagged it once, then twice, rising slowly into the air, barely grazing the tree tops. It was not long before they lost sight of the village and its people.

"Hang on tight," commanded Snoop. "I can't rise very high, on account of your weight—in fact, the wind is failing, and, unless I'm mistaken, it's back to earth for us."

"There's a desert under us," announced the dog, craning her neck, "which I don't like the looks of. If you can, keep going, until we make this next range of hills." But it seemed impossible to do so, as the morning wind, dwindling to the gentlest of breezes, lowered the dog and the rabbit in the loneliest spot imaginable. Small sand dunes, dotted by bluish grass, stretched on either side of them.

"Certainly looks cheerful," sniffed the rabbit, "wonder who lives here."

"Nobody," whined the dog, "who could stand such a miserable place?"

Instantly, the sand under their feet parted, and a bulgy-eyed lizard raised his head. He looked at them in a startled manner, as he began singing:

"My dear, you greatly pain me,
Insulting my fine home
I wish you'd go upon your way,
And leave me quite alone!"

Snoop's mouth opened, round as a melon, as he nudged Becky in her ribs. Then he said in melancholy tones:

"We didn't mean to be insulting. We just wondered who could live in a sand hole like this."

The lizard wrinkled up his mouth in a disagreeable way, telling them:

"I don't like strangers near me,
They offend my gentle soul,
They aggravate my temper,
With criticism bold!"

"Perhaps that is true," said the dog, "but, living in this desert has made you a very rude person. We had no intentions of disturbing you, and if you think we deliberately journeyed into this land you are greatly mistaken."

The lizard fixed his bulgy eyes upon them, then continued his rhyming:

"I don't know where you came from,
Or why you may be here,
But your disagreeable presence,
Has made me shed a tear!"

Snoop sighed so loud the desert

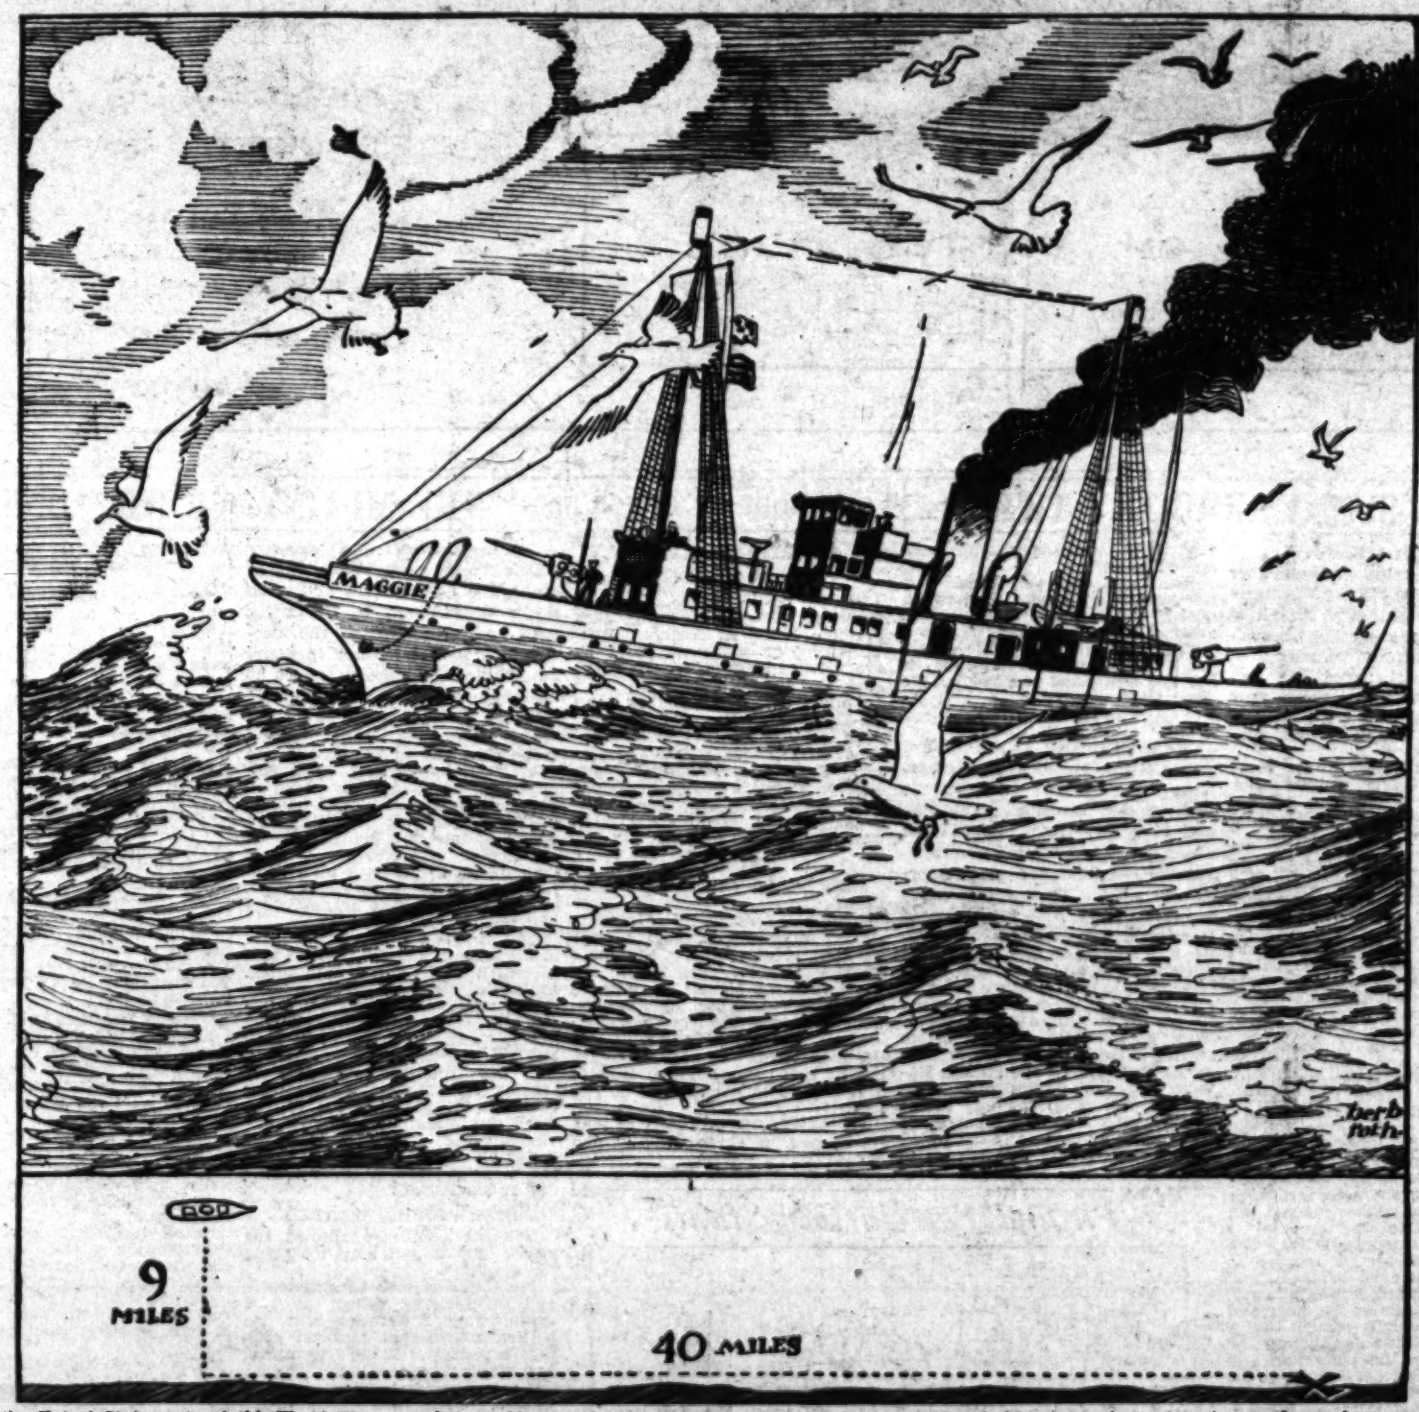
The Cruise of the Maggie



When the United States entered the World War one of its problems was to procure or construct a large number of ships to combat submarine warfare. As a consequence all sorts of vessels were picked up by the government, hastily equipped with guns and crews and sent out to look for submarines.

Among these ships, which became known as the "Suicide Fleet," was a converted yacht called the Margaret. The unfortunate crew had not been aboard a day before they rechristened her Maggie. She was certainly a prize. She leaked like a sieve, careened insanely at the first gust of a gale and almost fell apart every time one of her guns went off. The skipper was afraid to drop depth bombs for fear the Maggie would not be able to get away before they exploded. The ship never arrived anywhere on time, and invariably became lost when part of a convoy.

One day, while the Maggie was asthmatically cruising about near one of the Azores, she received notice by radio of a submarine which had its base some forty miles down the coast. Furthermore, she was ordered to proceed immediately to the attack.

With fear and trepidation the Maggie's commander set about obeying orders and swung her nose around to head for the submarine. Because of the Maggie's tremendous speed—about four knots—he confidently expected that the submarine would have time to travel to Germany and back before he got there. Nevertheless, being a conscientious man, he wanted to make sure he traveled as rapidly as possible.

Now the Maggie was then exactly nine miles from the nearest point on shore, which was roughly a straight line, as shown on the diagram. The submarine's base was forty miles down the shore from that nearest point.

The skipper calculated that the Maggie could travel at the rate of four miles an hour. His men, if he landed them at some point on the shore, could proceed at five miles an hour. If he was to make the best possible time, he had to find the proper point on the shore at which to land his men. If he sailed directly to the spot it would take ten hours and fifteen minutes, while if he sailed the nine miles to shore and landed his men there, it would also taken ten hours and fifteen minutes before they reached the submarine.

Somewhere along that forty-mile coast is the proper point to land if the men are to make the best time. Where is it? (Answer on Page 8.)

post humped his back in rage. Then he slid out of his hole, facing the two of them with fiery eyes. His next verse was not so pleasant:

"I am really quite a gentleman,
My manners are the best,
Until you stir up temper,
Within my manly chest.
Therefore, I am repeating,
Will you please be on your way.
I'm giving you a gentle hint,
By bidding you good day."

"Save your breath," snapped Becky, "we wouldn't stay if you begged us on your knees. That rhyming of yours drives me mad as the Ampi-Waumpus, with his two tails ticking in my ears." At mention of the Ampi-Waumpus, the lizard began to smile. He smiled, until his scaly face shone with joy. Then he coiled himself close to the rabbit, saying:

"A thousand pardons, dearest sir,
For all the words I've said;
The Ampi is my cousin,
Whom I believed was dead.
If you bring me news of Ampi,
You are welcome to my land,
I will cook your dinner instantly,
And serve it on the sand."

As the lizard scuttled into his hole, Becky said to the rabbit, "I think, myself, he's a bit off. Perhaps we should be going." Snoop, about to answer, leaped back, as a loud rumbling came from the lizard's home . . .

OUR ROLL OF HONOR

lacks the zip we demand. It would really be a publicity campaign for a certain high school. As for "The Mind At Large," you have turned out a story that is sufficiently ridiculous to be considered a classic.

Margaret Zengel: So sorry your solution to "The Cracked Mirror" reached us too late. Better luck next time, Margaret. You certainly can write!

Stephenie J. Meakin: "God's Tribute to His Mother," while having a very lovely theme, lacks true poetical meter. Try us once more.

Margaret Bunn: "As One Radio Fan Feels About It" lacks the much-wanted press appeal we are always harping upon. Your style is clever; you can certainly match words—Let's have a real story!

Daisy Blaettler: "Let's Be Sailors," while lacking in popular press appeal, is really very clever, so stay with the game, and try us once more. "Building Bridges" lacks a real zippy plot. Watch this in your future work, and you'll be on top of the world. "Call of the Wanderer" is a trifle stiff. Loosen up your meter, and note the improvement.

Winifred McCutcheon: "Lullaby" is an extremely sweet poem, but too stereotyped. We must remember poets can pack as much novelty of thought into verse as they do into prose. Stay with us, Winifred, and try again.

Ella Leon: "As You Take It" is a trifle forced, lacks real peppy form. The same criticism applies to "Advice Is Good," but "When It Rains" has both inspired thought and ragged meter. "I Ask God Then If" has ragged meter, but certainly is snappy. As for "Step On It," all I can say is, try some standard magazine as Smart, Bolo. You have turned out a poem that not only packs a wallop, but is really professional.

Betty Morrison: "A Boy's Dream," while having ragged meter, is certainly topnotch in thought. Correct this one fault and plenty of success will come your way.

Betty Garvey: "A Lost Herd" took my breath away, considering your age. You have tackled a refreshing topic, one that I wish more members would handle. We have few "Westerns" turned in. This particular story of yours should be built up more; that is my one criticism. The same may be said of "Mysterious Disappearance."

Marion Fowler: "Trying Out Your Guesser" is a trifle involved. The reader flounders, and cannot follow. Try us again, and see if we can't put your name in the A group.

Saba Selby: "A Box of Fireworks," while very well written, lacks a really strong gripping plot, so stay with us, Saba, and try, not once again, but many times, until you finally succeed. Every writer has an uphill grade to climb, and the harder the grade, the finer the work we have to do.

STRANGE ARABIA

By Aunt Dolly

Jidda, facing on the Red Sea, is desolate in appearance, its narrow streets having neither theaters, parks, show places, nor clubs, yet, despite this fact, it attracts more tourists than any city in the United States. For Jidda is "the Port to Paradise," leading pilgrims directly to Mecca. Consequently, its shores are dotted with every sort of vessel.

In Jidda, itself, there is a great accumulation of riff-raff from the East; ebony slaves fill its alleys, red-capped Turks, whirling dervishes, barefoot women, with eyeslits in their masks. It is a decrepit little town, with strange-looking houses, fashioned out of coral rock and mud. Deeply cracked in spots they occasionally rise to five and six stories in height. Such is Jidda, the walled city, in which strangers are confined and not allowed to leave without permission from officers in authority.

Mystic Nedjef, in comparison, is a marvel of inner Arabia. A glittering city, crowned by gold domes, rich in treasure, and weird rites. It is the Mecca of Shea Mohammedans, perhaps the only city in the world in which not a blade of grass or green thing lives. The streets are three to four feet wide, crooked and winding, ending, at intervals, in jungle paths. The houses are apparently fashioned from baked mud, usually two stories in height, flat-roofed, and without a window opening out on a public thoroughfare.

Women go heavily veiled, and those who work manufacture fancy shrouds and prayer bricks.

Now that you have gained a general conception of this fantastic country, it will not astonish you to find that many Arabs dwell alone, believing firmly in superstition. Thus they believe they not only avoid the evil eye, but in some instances tattoo the body and limbs to ward off disease.

TOMATO

By Alex Melancon, Larose, La.

People did not call them tomatoes in those days, but the plants were almost as popular as they are today. Every girl planted some in her flower garden, and I'll tell you the reason why. Not only did the plants with their red fruit seem extremely decorative, they were made use of in another manner.

Everybody thought the tomatoes were very poisonous, and were some sort of apple. It happened many times that a girl had so many fellows asking her to marry them that she did not know how to get rid of them. She made sure she had a generous supply of tomatoes in her garden, and when one of her lovers threatened to kill himself if she refused him (that was one of the quaint fashions of those days) she invited him to eat one of the red vegetables.

"You'll find it right convenient to kill yourself," the girl would say. "Eat hearty before you go."

This was said so often, and it was rumored that so many young men poisoned themselves in this way, that the tomatoes became known as "love apples."

Now, there lived one girl who was loved by every young fellow who looked at her. I don't know what she was called, but maybe her name was Sue; that's as good a name as any. Sue did not like to be bothered by these fellows, for she thought she was too young to marry, and she planted her whole garden in love apples. And then the instant a young man started asking her to marry him, she would reply:

"Have a love apple."

Of course, the young men did not eat the apples, for they knew there were many other girls who might want them if Sue didn't. They just took her words as meaning she did not like them enough to marry them. However, there was one young fellow who took them seriously—and thereby hangs my tale.

His name was Thomas Ato, and he was a very personable young fellow. At least, so thought most of the girls of the village who were willing to have him make love to them. Most of the girls, I mean, except Sue. And because she did not want him, Thomas decided no other girl would do for him.

"Poor Tom!" people said. "It's a pity he should be trying to make that heartless girl love him."

Sue had a lot of fun with Tom, for he had a good deal of money and could buy her quantities of marshmallow candies, which she adored. She ate his candies, then laughed at him when he asked her to become his wife.

"Don't be silly!" she said.

"I love you!" he insisted, repeating it goodness knows how many times. "Don't you love me?"

"Of course, not!" she giggled.

"Say you love me!" he begged. "I'll die if you don't."

That annoyed Sue considerably. "Go ahead and die," she said with great impatience. "My garden is full of love apples you can poison yourself with."

He grabbed her hand and kissed it in a peculiar fashion. "Very well, dear," he said. "Life is not worth living without your love."

And he went into her garden. Sue thought he wouldn't dare eat the "love apples" for none of the other fellows had done so. Therefore, it somewhat scared her to seek him pick up a big one and start eating it. She didn't like the idea of a man dying in her garden for love of her.

"Don't do it, Tom," she begged. "Don't do it!"

"Will you marry me if I desist?" he asked.

"No, I won't," she said.

"Then I'll kill myself," he returned.

He did his best, eating love apples until there were no more left. And it was very discouraging, for instead of making him feel sick enough to die, the "apples" seemed to do him good. He had never felt better in his life than when he was through. I suppose he was a little surprised, for how was he to guess that the love apples had health-giving properties?

Well, seeing that he could not kill himself, he made love to Sue again, and the apples had given him such strength that he was able to ask her and ask her to marry him until she was too tired to refuse.

Many other young fellows did exactly the same thing, pretending they were poisoning themselves for love to win their girls. And just as we would say today that a man crossing the ocean in an airplane had done a "Lindbergh," people said that these young men were doing a "Tom Ato." And that name stuck to the love apples.

So that is why we call them tomatoes today.

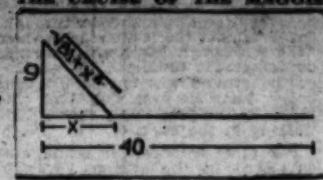
THE CRUISE OF THE MAGGIE



Let X equal the distance from the nearest point on shore to the point we wish to find. Then the square root of (81 plus X squared) is the distance from the ship to that point, since the square of the hypotenuse of a right-angle triangle equals the sum of the squares of the other two sides.

The speed on sea is to the speed on land as 4 is to 5. The distance covered along the lines in the diagram have the opposite ratio. Therefore, 5 over 4 equals the square root of (81 plus X square) over X. Squaring both sides of this equation and simplifying, we get X squared equal to 144, and X equal to 12. Therefore, the Maggie traveled fifteen miles at four miles an hour, and the men walked twenty-eight miles at five miles an hour, a total of nine hours twenty-one minutes. This is a saving of fifty-four minutes.

THE MUTINY AT THE MINE

Dick had little time to think as he glided the airplane down through the cloud, but the few thoughts that flashed through his brain were not optimistic. He could not tell whether the ground was ten or 100 feet below him. He was handling the plane by the "feel" only it was like walking in the dark.

For some seconds the plane was enveloped in the damp, grayish mass. Then it swooped out from under the cloud less than fifty feet from the ground.

Directly ahead of the speeding airplane loomed a wide-roofed shed. It was too late to turn. The only chance lay in going over the building, if possible, and landing on the partially cleared space on the other side. Skillfully managing to preserve every foot of altitude without going so slow that there was danger of stalling, Dick nosed the plane along. He saw quickly that the machine would not clear the structure. He tried to utilize his remaining speed to raise the plane a few feet, but instead of climbing it stalled through the air with the nose pointing up, settling steadily all the time.

With the realization that the plane was going to strike the shed, Dick knocked the goggles from his eyes, protecting his face with his right forearm and hand and his abdomen with the left. With every muscle tense he braced himself in the seat. For a quivering second he waited—then, in spite of the wide safety belt around his waist, he was thrown violently forward against the instrument board to an accompaniment of snapping timbers.

Dick gingerly opened his eyes and looked around. Then he gasped in astonishment. Instead of being a twisted mass on the ground the airplane was serenely perched on the roof of the shed. The landing-gear had broken through and held the plane bird-like; with the exception of a few minor breakages, it was undamaged on the ridge of the roof.

Excited voices on the ground drew Dick's attention. Every door and window in the big shed was leaking Mexicans. They circled about the building gesticulating and shouting as they gazed at the strange machine that had so suddenly appeared from nowhere.

Presently the tall figure of a northerner shouldered his way through the crowd and came to the edge of the roof.

"Where in blazes did you come from you—hawk?" he demanded.

Dick did not immediately reply. He was looking at a sign over the door of the building from which the American had emerged. It read:

Timekeeper's Office
Jesus Maria Mine

A week later, the plane successfully removed from the roof and repaired, Dick said "good-by" to Jesus Maria Mine, now restored to tranquillity. His return to Laredo was uneventful. He made his report to Harrison, and not much later the same day he was on his way again. From time to time, as he winged his way over the mesquite, Dick smiled at the thought of the $300 and the no less valuable letter of recommendation that reposed in his pocket.

"I didn't expect to get rid of my poverty in just that way," he thought. It was a good way! And Harrison says there's a job waiting for me in San Antone.

"It's a pretty good life, after all!"

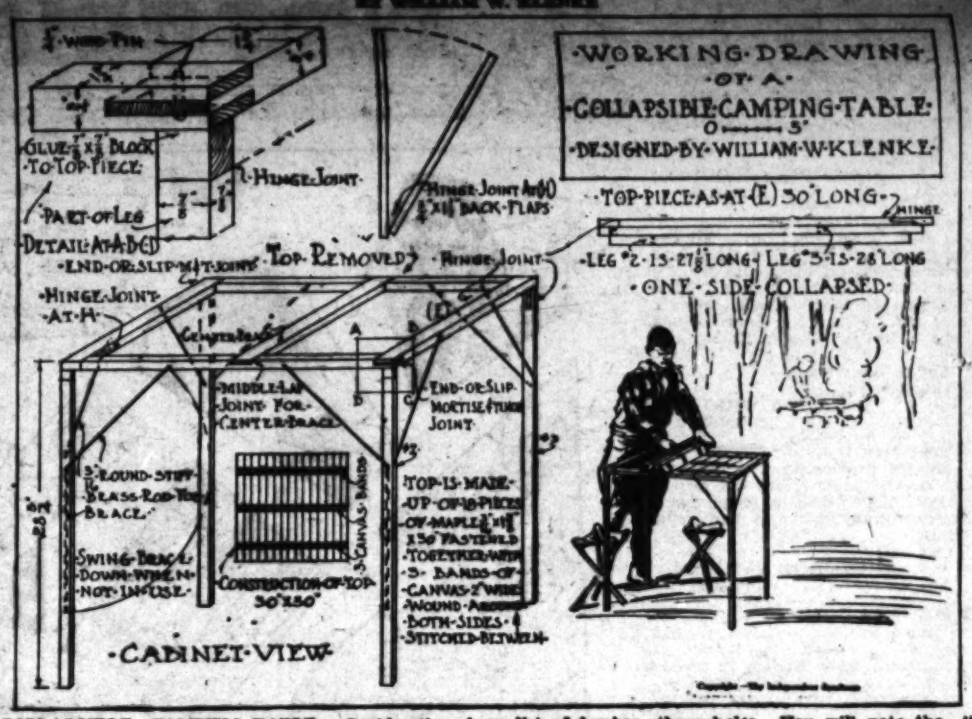
"THINGS EASY TO MAKE"

BY WILLIAM W. KLENKE



COLLAPSIBLE CAMPING TABLE

Boys, let's try our hand at making a camping table, one that you can collapse into a compact bundle, and at the same time, a table that is sturdy. The one I have shown is simple to make, requires very little material, is easy to erect and is a table I am sure you will want as an addition to your camping equipment.

You will require the following pieces of wood, called stock:

Two pieces for the top frame, 3-4 by 1 3-4 by 30 inches.

Two pieces for the top frame, 3-4 by 1 3-4 by 28 1-4 inches.

One piece for the center brace, 3-4 by 1 3-4 by 30 inches.

Two pieces for the legs, 7-8 by 7-8 by 27 1-8 inches.

Two pieces for the legs, 7-8 by 7-8 by 28 inches.

Two pieces for top of the legs, 7-8 by 7-8 by 7-8 inches.

Eighteen pieces for the top, 3-16 by 1 5-8 by 30 inches.

On account of the small dimensions of each of the various pieces, you should use a strong hard wood, as maple, birch, ash, hickory, oak, etc.

Besides the above list of lumber, you will need:

Eight brass rods, 3-16 by 15 inches.

One pair 3-4 by 3-4-inch hinges.

Two pair 3-4 by 1½-inch hinges (back flaps.)

Three strips of canvas to go around the top pieces.

Step No. 1, stock: Plane all the pieces to the sizes given with true, smooth surfaces. Any carpenter shop or lumber mill will gladly run out these few pieces for you.

Step No. 2, top frame: Make this frame so as to fold in two separate units, with a hinge joint; then these two units are fastened together with an end or slip mortise and tenon joint. Insert a 1-4 dowel pin to hold the pieces together.

Step No. 3, the legs: Glue the two small blocks to the frame as indicated. Hinge two legs to these blocks and the other two legs to the frame.

Step No. 4, the braces: Bore 3-16-inch holes for the braces, as indicated on the drawing. Bend the ends of the brass rods to fit into these holes. You will note that it is possible to swing the rods out of the way and fasten them to the legs by the boring of an extra hole.

Step No. 5, the top: Make the top of 3-16-inch strips, which are held together by three bands of canvas, stitched between the strips. This top can be folded like an accordian.

Step No. 6, finish: Soak all the pieces (except the top) in boiled linseed oil; wipe off the surplus oil and allow several days to elapse so that it may dry thoroughly.

The top is folded together thus:

Pull the dowel pins out, then pull the brass braces out, finally the center brace. Now separate the top frame into two sections; swing the two legs underneath each section. Fasten two straps around the entire bundle and connect these to form a handle.

Now, boys, you are ready to serve a good meal in comfort outdoors, on the table you have made yourself. I know how pleased you will be with it when you have completed this project and with what pride you will exhibit it to your friends.

Dear Aunt Dolly:

I can hardly wait for each ship that brings The Junior Times. I am always down at different mazazine stores to see if our little paper has arrived. When I say little, I don't mean the club itself, I always mean the size of the paper. It is always a pleasure looking forward to the time when I can see Ed Shulita's cartoons. Ed is my best selection as a cartoonist of The Junior Times. I also am delighted when I see Phil De Lara's and Laura Brock's pictures. They surely can draw entertaining pictures

That story of Irving Koster's, which appeared in the June 8, 1930, issue of The Junior Times, certainly was worth printing. I enjoyed every bit of it. If I could write just one-third as good as Irving, I would have something behind me to encourage myself. I am always looking forward, Aunt Dolly, to the day the next Junior Times arrives. I enjoy the magazine very much. Quite a few Hawaiian boys ask me if I could give them the plans of the model airplanes when I get through with them. They surely are glad to get some plans of that sort. Well, goodby, Aunt Dolly, and I will meet you in The Junior Times next week.

Peggy Hamilton chooses from William Hepner's incomparable collection of wigs for every occasion, especially the faultless and beautiful wigs for personal use, this soft, white flattering wig which she featured with one of her costumes in the "Pageant of Jewels" at the Biltmore Hotel.

"The women of America congratulate William Hepner on the success of his original creation, the 'Halo-Tress.' This great artist has produced an incomparable hair accessory, and in some cases a necessity, fashioned of long, naturally curly hair, which transforms the boyish bob in a few minutes to a genuinely feminine head-dress. That the 'Halo-Tress' does more for one in two minutes than your favorite hairdresser could do for you in an hour, or nature in six months, softening the contour of the face and giving a truly feminine appearance to the wearer, is my personal opinion, and knowledge of the 'Halo-Tress.'"

Admit it or not, a good part of the American scene is dominated by barbed-wire fences and automobiles in solid black. At least Charles Pollock, returning Southland artist, so sees the scene in some of his watercolors, now being exhibited here.

Weaves Song of Autumn and of Life

Ladd Haystead, director, New Mexico Service Bureau, with rug woven by eighty-six-year-old woman member of Two Grey Hills' section of Navajo tribe who, because of some sense of youthful sin, couldn't weave sacred Ya Ba Chai prayer rugs, so determined to create woven story of the sunset months of the year and of her life. The corn leaves hang down, as in autumn, the wild geese fly south, and the background is of brown wool, which is the earth color at autumn. Mr. Haystead is pointing to the irregular trail made in the weaving for the soul to escape from the rug, which is according to the transmigration theory of the Navajo.

Look at the vital inner parts

THAT MAKE YOUR PLUMBING SYSTEM WORK...

● BELOW—A Kohler efficiency sink with swing spout faucet in the Dynamic design, equipped with Duostrainer—brings new beauty and utility to the kitchen.

● RIGHT, BOTTOM—The Kohler Duostrainer provides a tight water seal, a five-inch unobstructed draining area, and has a removable strainer cup.

GOOD BUILDERS today are especially careful about plumbing fixtures and fittings and accessories. They have learned that the bathroom will be looked at first . . . that the kitchen is more important than the sunporch . . . that the difference between good plumbing and doubtful plumbing will often make a sale or sign a lease.

It doesn't take a mechanical engineer to discern that difference. When you look at Kohler fixtures you see their finer design and finish. You notice their clearer, brighter, smoother surfaces—their perfection of detail. Each piece is correctly designed and correctly executed. And the quality goes straight through. The Kohler mark is a sign of careful craftsmanship, inside and out.

● Examine the working parts

The heart of your plumbing system is hidden. Here of all places, highest quality is vital—special attention on your part will be well repaid.

Kohler metal fittings are made of fine brass . . . designed as precisely as a piece of jewelry . . . cast, machined and polished with extreme care. They have fewer parts, simpler mechanisms, noticeably heavier valves, drains and connections. All these things mean easier, quieter and more positive action. All these things work for continued good service, for security.

Prevention of plumbing troubles costs far less than cure. Years of usefulness are added by an extra eighth inch of metal at the right place. Whether you plan to build or rent, an hour spent in getting inside information will show clearly why Kohler fittings avoid discomfort and even danger . . . and how they reduce up-keep to the irreducible minimum.

A Kohler four-valve shower with an engraved plate over a built-in bath ... ing and practical installation. In the Octachrome design.

Here, quality is the best possible investment. Kohler installations cost no more to put in, add property value and save money in the end. If a million home builders were to broadcast advice about plumbing their one major point would be—Avoid second-rate fixtures and fittings. It pays to have the best! Kohler quality is an economical luxury—one that brings yearly dividends of satisfaction, as long as you live.

A visit to the nearest Kohler showroom will give you a wealth of new ideas on fixtures and fittings. Anyone who plans to build or remodel should discuss this important subject with his architect and plumbing contractor. Meanwhile, write for free Booklet E-7, which illustrates attractive groupings and suggests modern ideas about home plumbing. . . . Kohler Co. Founded 1873. Kohler, Wisconsin. . . . ELEVEN IMPORTANT POINTS ABOUT PLUMBING

1 Kohler designs are decorative, purposeful, correct.
2 Kohler enamel is made by an exclusive formula, fused with an everlasting bond and keeps its smooth, glistening surface.
3 Vitreous china pieces are sculptured for beauty and service... thoroughly vitrified at high temperatures and armored with a smooth, lustrous, lasting glaze.
4 Kohler colors are soft, livable pastels . . . the white is a perfect white . . . the black a clear, brilliant black.
5 Kohler metal fittings are engineered for efficiency . . . finely plated with chromium, nickel or gold. They match the fixtures in style, character and quality.
6 Materials are the finest—manufacture is most perfect. All Kohler products show craftsmanship and care.
7 This company pioneered many of the big advances in plumbing. This year's Kohler products are next year's new ideas.
8 Kohler quality extends to the kitchen and laundry for every plumbing need.
9 Kohler quality costs no more . . . and saves money later.

THEY WERE MARRIED AT THE RANCHO

Sally Eilers and Hoot Gibson select the groom's huge estate for the ceremony.

By GRACE KINGSLEY

IT PUTS one in the mood for a charming episode like a wedding—one's own, even, or somebody else's (anybody's wedding will do)—doesn't it, this riding along through the quiet, dark night to a lonely, romantic ranch? remarked Stella, as we began to glimpse the lights of Hoot Gibson's picturesque Spanish ranch home under the huge live-oak and sycamore trees near Newhall.

By the end Sally Eilers were to be married that night, and as the warm light streamed from doors and windows, we could almost imagine that if we mentally turned all these automobiles into Spanish carriages and prancing horses, that we were a wonderful party of old Spanish days that we were going to attend.

Right Hoot, in his big sombrero, mounted on his horse with its silver-carved Spanish saddle, might have carried out the illusion; but then was Hoot, handsome as he could be in modern evening clothes, ready for his wedding, while Sally's charming father and mother were aiding in receiving.

One end of the great living-room—which is built in the style of a refectory of one of the old Spanish missions, with arches and alcoves—had been turned into a bower effect, with candles, a bell of white roses, and innumerable tall palms and white flowers, against the ivy in its loveliness. Ropes of ivy ribbon and flowers extended from the center of the room for the bridal party, but on either side the luxurious old Spanish furniture had been left, and there we discovered many guests lounging.

Mary Allison was one of the first we greeted. May used to be a star, you know, and could be one if she wished, she looks so well, youthful and charming. She is married to James Quirk, magazine owner, and says that she never cares to hear the purr of a camera again.

We met Sue Carol, and she was laughing because, clad as she was in a very exclusive model of one of the new flowered taffetas and having been congratulating herself all the way down to the wedding that nobody could possibly have a dress like hers, she had apparently met herself coming in the door! Mrs. Eddie Cline had a dress exactly like her own!

"We're going to learn some songs and do a sister act! We'll be the Apple Sisters, Seedie and Corey!" she laughed.

THERE was a little flurry of talk, among some guests seated on a sofa, and we met Lucille Webster Gleason, who told us that two of the bridesmaids would be absent, due to illness. Bubbles Denny, Reginald Denny's wife, and Jeanette Loff had both that very day, singularly enough, been taken ill with appendicitis and had been rushed off to hospitals.

Reginald Denny, though, was to be an usher, and like the good sport he was he came to go through the ceremony, but dashed right away after the wedding to go to his wife's bedside.

"HUSH! Someone is singing to the music of an organ somewhere!" exclaimed Stella. "The wedding must be about to begin!"

And we listened to a very lovely feminine voice singing a love ballad. All the guests dashed to the center of the room, and then the voice commenced "Oh, Promise Me!" and we thrilled as we waited for the wedding procession.

Very lovely looked the bridesmaids in their pastel-shaded chiffon dresses. The hands of sweet little Carmen Pantages trembled perceptibly, as, bearing her bouquet, she tripped down the aisle; for although she has acted as bridesmaid before, she has never been maid of honor, and she was suffering stage fright. Besides, Sally is a great friend of hers, and as Sally herself was, of course, quite trembly, Carmen, being the most sympathetic girl alive, apparently had caught the infection.

Marie Prevost was lovely as bridal attendant, and so were Mae Sunday and Marion Nixon.

In her wedding finery Sally Eilers was one of the most attractive brides of the season.

"If ever I get married," whispered Stella, "I want Buster Collier as best man. He's so handsome in evening clothes!"

And, of course, the corps of ushers was most distinguished, including Reginald Denny, Dr. Harry Martin and Wallace Davis.

SALLY EILERS was like a lovely doll in her brilliant-trimmed white Juliet cap and lace cape, her exquisite lace dress, and the long veil.

"That veil," Sally confided, "is a dream come true. You see, when I was a little girl, and used to play bride, I'd put yards and yards of mosquito netting or lace curtains on for a veil, and this veil is just as long as the one I'd always intended wearing at my wedding."

Dr. Lash, who performed the ceremony—it's a very nice ritual he uses, by the way, a simple, devout, friendly sort of ritual—will soon be called "the marrying parson," if he isn't already. He is very popular with the film folk, because he seems to understand their problems.

The ceremony was made more than usually impressive, too, by the fact that the singer chanted a soft obligato during the reading of it, so that one got more than ever into the spirit of the old Spanish mission days.

HOOT'S little girl was at the wedding, and her eyes were wide with wonder and delight. We hear that Sally and the child are devoted to each other. Sally had given the little girl a birthday party the day before.

"Sally never looked so pretty," observed Stella. "Her eyes are so bright and her cheeks so flushed—her color comes and goes—it isn't of the kind that comes but doesn't go!"

The bride and groom circulated among their guests, and Louis Wolheim declared he was going to kiss the groom!

We asked Mrs. Gleason if it reminded her of her wedding, and she said no, she just couldn't remember when she wasn't married to Jimmie Gleason!

GEORGE LEWIS was there with his pretty wife, Mary Lou. But Mary Lou's chin was done up in adhesive tape and cotton, and we found that she had taken a tumble while horseback riding a day or two before.

"And she went down to the doctor today and got a nice new chin dressing for the wedding," George grinned, whimsically.

George said that he and Mary Lou had met at this very ranch when they both came to see Hoot one day.

"And the romance began right then," George assured me.

WE MET Thelma Todd and Harvey Priester as we circulated through the crowd, Thelma looking perfectly stunning in a pale blue dinner gown with large floppy black lace straw hat and long black gloves.

Eddie Cline was sitting by himself comfortably in a big chair while his wife went about saying hello to guests, and we asked Eddie why he didn't go about, too.

"Oh, I'm tired and my feet hurt, and besides I always play atmosphere at these weddings," he explained.

WHEN supper was served at the tete-a-tete tables, James and Lucille Gleason, Mrs. Daniels, Russell Gleason, Mr. and Mrs. Cline and Harriet Parsons were our dinner partners at two tables close to each other.

Russell Gleason joked his mother, following the ceremony, saying that she was "under the ropes and in the ring before the ceremony was fairly over!"

Eddie Cline remarked that they certainly gave the preacher good lighting, and that Buster Collier had done a good job of pantomiming.

Marie Prevost said hello, and declared that, in spite of all the coaching by Bebe's mother, she had started off with the left foot instead of the right when the wedding procession started.

MONTE BLUE came over to greet our crowd after supper. He told how his car had broken down on the way to the wedding, and how he had hailed Ben Lyon's car, but Ben had driven right on, thinking Monte was a bandit! But he had been able to stop Harvey Priester and get help, so we voted Harvey the hero of the evening.

Monte was feeling a bit low, because his beautiful wife, Tove, was to be operated on for appendicitis next morning, and he said he felt lost there without her, but that she had insisted he come so that he could tell her about it afterward.

"Who is that lovely girl sitting next to Mrs. Cline?" Stella whispered. "She looks exactly like a Howard Chandler Christy girl." Next moment we met her. She is Mrs. Lonnie Dorsa.

MARIE MOSQUINI declared she was going to catch the bridal bouquet, and Russell Gleason said to her: "Well, you're becoming a regular professional. That will be the third bride bouquet you've caught this season. Go into training and I'll take you on as your manager at ten per cent."

Jimmie Gleason remarked, kiddingly, with that serious expression of his, "It's getting to be a racket!"

Sure enough, Marie did catch the bouquet.

Ben Lyon came over and told us how a photographer at his own wedding came in following the ceremony to take a special kind of picture. Ben told him to wait a little while, and the photographer said, "You don't happen to be a member of the wedding party, do you?"

"Oh, just the groom!" Ben had answered.

OTHER guests we caught sight of and said hello to were Bud Ellers, Robert Leonard and Gertrude Olmsted, Jerry Miley, Buster Keaton and his wife; Mary Astor, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mack, Millard Webb and Mary Eaton, his wife; Cliff Edwards, Victor Fleming, Harian Fengler, Marion Byron, Mr. and Mrs. William K. Howard and many others.

We found out that the bride and groom are going to Banff and Lake Louise in Canada on their wedding tour when they have finished pictures they are making.

We remarked, on the way home, at the charm and ease of the occasion—just like a big, delightful family party.

Romualdo Tirado, of the Spanish stage, plays the leading role—the animal trainer—in "La Jaula de los Leones" ("The Lion's Cage"), one of the initial Spanish talkies. The film will be shown locally in a few weeks.

END FAT

THE WAY IS SHORT AND EASY

MOST women in these days know the right way to fight fat. Some are told by their physicians, some by friends. And for 22 years millions have been reading about Marmola. Those who starve to reduce, or who don't reduce, form a small minority now.

This has come about since science discovered a great cause of excess fat. It lies in an under-active gland. All the world over, they who wear obesity now aim to correct that cause.

The method they use is embodied in Marmola prescription tablets. People have used them for 22 years—millions of boxes of them. They have told the results to others. So the changed conditions seen today are largely due to Marmola.

A book in each box of Marmola gives the formula and explains the reasons for all good results. When you gain new youth and beauty, new health and vigor, you know why. No abnormal exercise or diet is advised. This modern method combats the cause.

Marmola has for many years held top place in this field. Anyone who is overfat should test it, in justice to herself. It is not only the easy but the right way to reduce. Learn how much it means to you. Start now.

Marmola prescription tablets are sold by all druggists at $1 a box. Any druggist who is out will gladly order for you.

What Swiss Science Found Out About Your Underweight, Nervous Child

'LIFE STORIES of

Increasing Weight—A pound or more a week

Improving Appetite—*M*ore food with no coaxing

Bringing New Energy—*A*nd greater strength each day

The discovery from Switzerland that is solving child problems for mothers everywhere

Over in Switzerland, as you may know, they have done wonders in child feeding. Their famous child sanitariums have accomplished almost the miraculous.

If you have a child that is underweight—nervous, or easily exhausted—that won't eat enough, or drink milk, we think you will be interested in every picture on this page. For these pictures illustrate the use of this Swiss method in the United States.

These pictures tell a wonderful story to any mother—the story of how thousands of nervous, unhappy, underweight children have been almost miraculously rebuilt to the happy vigor of normal childhood.

The results pictured here were gained by the use of a remarkable Swiss food concentrate. Discovered almost 40 years ago by a famous Swiss scientist, the use of this food-drink—called Ovaltine—has spread over some 54 countries of the world.

New to America, over 20,000 doctors—many world-famous child experts—are advising it.

If your child is underweight for his age or height—try it.

If your child is nervous, irritable, cries easily or tosses in his sleep—try it.

If your child's appetite is poor—or he won't drink milk—try it.

If your child seems to tire quickly—try it.

If your child is recovering from any illness—try it.

If your child tends to lose weight during the summer—try it.

It has worked wonders in thousands of cases like these. It may do much or little for your child—but try it.

What It Is

Ovaltine is a food-drink that is utterly different in formula, taste and effect from any other known. A scientific food concentrate not remotely to be confused with powdered, sugary, chocolate, malt or cocoa "mixtures" offered as substitutes.

Developed almost 40 years ago by a famous Swiss scientist, Ovaltine contains, in highly concentrated form, virtually every vital food element necessary to life, including, of course, the Sunshine Vitamin D.

Due to an exclusive process, employed by no other food-drink known, it supplies those vital elements in such easily digested form that a child's system can absorb them even when digestion is impaired.

How It Acts

Some of those elements in Ovaltine build bone and muscle. And thus create new strength. Others build firm flesh. And thus constantly increase weight. Others develop nerve poise; for, as weight increases nervousness perceptibly decreases.

"He's Gained 5 Pounds in 4½ Weeks"

After my little boy had had his tonsils removed, I found it impossible to build up either his nerves or his weight. He was much underweight and so fretful that I thought I might have to take him to the mountains for his health. My husband and I decided to give Ovaltine a trial—giving it to our boy regularly twice a day. Yesterday we weighed him and do you know what we found?

He had gained 5 pounds in 4½ weeks! These results were so surprising that I weighed him twice to make sure that I was right. Really, I can't be thankful enough for Ovaltine.

Mrs. M. W. C., 2640 N. Charles St.; Baltimore, Maryland

Other elements foster richer blood. And thus combat conditions of anemia. All are supplied in scientific ratio to meet the body's needs. That is why results are often so astonishing.

Digests Starches

Then, too, Ovaltine has high diastatic power. Which means the power of digesting the undigested starches from other foods eaten.

Thus, this scientific creation not only furnishes tremendous food energy in itself, but greatly increases the effectiveness of all starch foods your child eats. Such as oatmeal, bread, potatoes, etc., which comprise over half the normal child's daily diet. Consider what this means.

You take this food-drink in milk, hot or cold. Children love its new delicious flavor—it makes them drink more milk and makes every glass doubly nourishing.

Give it at breakfast, always. Give it with meals and between meals. One week's results will surprise you. Note the difference in your child's weight; in nerve poise, in greater strength and energy. Get a can tomorrow and find out, for your child's sake, what this creation means to you and yours. Get Ovaltine—in 3 sizes—at any drug or grocery store.

(Note)—Thousands of nervous people, men and women, are using Ovaltine to restore vitality when fatigued. During the Great War, it was a standard ration prescribed by the Red Cross as a restorative food for invalid soldiers of all nations. Ovaltine is now made in 8 countries (including the U. S. A.) according to the exact original Swiss formula—to meet the demand from 54 different nations. 743

"It Put Her on Her Feet, When I Was Sure I Was Losing Her"

My little daughter 2½ years old had the flu with measles following. As the result of this she was very puny and nervous, cried all day, bit her finger nails, and refused to eat her meals or drink milk. At night she was restless. Altogether she was in bad shape.

Ovaltine put my little girl on her feet again when I was sure I was losing her. The roses are coming back in her cheeks. She sleeps and eats regularly, does not bite her finger nails any more, plays out in the sunshine all day and is altogether a different little girl.

Mrs. John Rosen, 8416 Garfield Blvd., Cleveland, Ohio

"They Drink Twice the Milk They Used to—Since a Friend Advised Ovaltine"

My little boy and girl would not drink the amount of milk the doctor said they should have. I tried every way I knew to coax them to drink their milk without success. They were nervous, underweight and irritable and I was worried.

Then a friend advised me to try Ovaltine—to put it in the children's milk and give it to them hot or cold.

I did this and noticed an improvement at once. That's how I got my children to drink twice the milk they used to, in the face of the fact that a week ago I couldn't even coax them to drink enough. And they are so much more healthy.

Mrs. C. A. Shumaker, 20th Ave. & 14th St., Fulton, Illinois

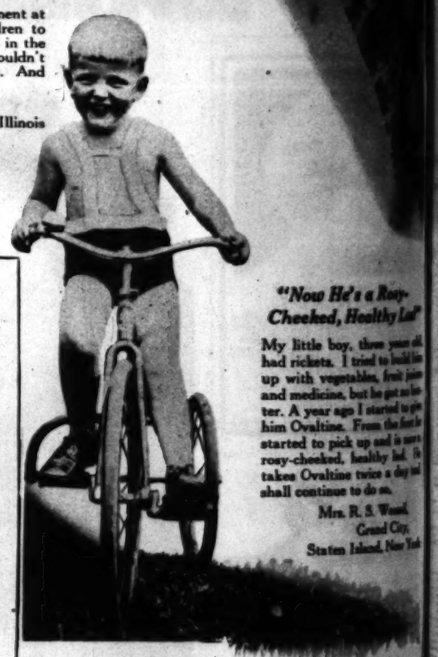
"They've Made Wonderful Gains in Weight and Color"

I've been using Ovaltine since it first came on the market for both my children, ages 5 and 7 years. Like many children, my little girl, now aged 7, was underweight and not very strong. She refused to eat breakfast or to drink milk and my little son was much the same.

Having read about Ovaltine in a magazine, I decided to try it. Both of the children loved it from the first, particularly the little girl. Now they both drink their Ovaltine regularly, warm in winter, cold in summer, and I feel that they are always sure of having enough food.

Ovaltine has built my little girl up into a strong robust girl, and has been splendid for the boy. They've both made wonderful gains in weight and color, all due to the constant use of Ovaltine. I've told many, many mothers about it both in Chicago, my former home, and here in Jacksonville.

Mrs. J. H. Frink, 2108 Frederica Place, Jacksonville, Fla.



"Now He's a Rosy-Cheeked, Healthy Lad"

My little boy, three years old, had rickets. I tried to build him up with vegetables, fruit juices and medicine, but he got no better. A year ago I started to give him Ovaltine. From the first he started to pick up and is now rosy-cheeked, healthy lad. He takes Ovaltine twice a day and shall continue to do so.

"We Noticed an Immediate Increase in Weight"

My small son was a perfectly healthy child, but his appetite had fallen off noticeably during the summer heat. I started to see if Ovaltine would provide the necessary food elements and vitamins even though he was not eating much solid food as usual.

We noticed an immediate increase in weight and he has certainly come through the hot weather in first-class shape. He likes Ovaltine immensely—drinks it 3 times a day with meals and whenever he wants it between meals.

RIOT RENDS ELECTION

Blood Flows at Juarez Polls

One Voter Slain and Five Wounded in Clash of Factions

Socialists Charge National Revolutionary Party Rules Balloting

EL PASO, July 20. (AP)—One man was shot to death, five others were stabbed and a policeman was injured seriously today in rioting between members of the National Revolutionary party of Chihuahua and the Socialist party during a special State election in Juarez, Chih., across the international boundary from here, despite the establishment of martial law.

Juan Zaldivar, 35 years of age, riding on a truck loaded with members of the National Revolutionary party, was shot by a man said to have been a Socialist party member. He died in two hours.

SCORE JAILED

Charged with demonstrating against the administration, twenty-five members of the Socialist League of Resistance were jailed. Hand-to-hand fighting occurred at polls in precinct No. 1, about 700 men being involved. Women were employed in the fighting.

The Juarez administration is composed entirely of members of the National Revolutionary party of Chihuahua.

SOCIALISTS GATHER

Antonio Corona, Mexican Senator, and other leaders of the Socialist party, elected the constituents of Manuel M. Prieto, candidate for governor, were not allowed to cast their votes in Juarez precincts, charging that the National Revolutionary party of Chihuahua members forcibly took charge of precinct voting booths with the aid of police.

Several hundred members of the Socialist party gathered in the plaza shortly before noon. Speeches were made by Corona and other leaders who said members of the Socialist party were being denied their rights as Mexican citizens. The meeting followed the rioting and was comparatively quiet, mounted squads of soldiers and police patrolled the streets during the meeting.
